Township will look at policy

By Diane Gale
staff writer

"What's in it for Canton?" asked resident Robert Lett at Tuesday's board meeting in reference to an industrial tax break.

The question came minutes before the board gave Kohl Madden Printing Ink a tax abatement extending to the year 2002, just months before Canton is expected to adopt a tougher policy on tax cuts.

THE COMPANY, which manufactures, sells and distributes printing ink, is moving from its current Ronda Drive location down the street to another Ronda building. Township officials said Tuesday they didn't know how much the company would save in taxes from the abatement.

The board of trustees Tuesday passed the tax break on real and personal property by a 3-2 vote. Trustee Elaine Kirchgatter and Treasurer Gerry Brown were opposed while supervisor Tom Yack, clerk Loren Bennett and trustee Bob Shefferly were in favor. Trustees John Preniczky and Phil LaJoy were absent.

The state approved tax abatement program gives industrial companies 50 percent off on taxes for up to 12 years with the approval of local government.

"The question is if we don't offer it will businesses stay and others come," Yack said. "Some say half a loaf is better than none. The other side says you get half the taxes. And not everyone who is here now has gotten tax abatements."

Kirchgatter said she would be in favor of a tax break if it weren't for the full 12 years. A majority of the tax bill goes to the schools, Kirchgatter said, and right now they're in financial woes.

Accommodating 450 additional ninth graders and 16 teachers at the already crowded Centennial Educational Park next fall has administrators looking for ways to maximize every inch of space at the high schools.

Plymouth Canton principal Tom Tattan and Salem principal Jerry Ostoin led school board members on a tour of the facility recently.

The principals showed the future location of six portable classrooms; rooms scheduled for conversion to science labs; and classrooms with mismatched, old furniture that needs replacing.

The changes "are not ideal, but hopefully they'll make it more livable," Tattan said.

ADMINISTRATION AT CEP has had little trouble convincing school officials the improvements are necessary.

"Essentially the science labs have not been renovated since 1970, and some of them have been used for things other than science," Superintendent John Hoben said.

"It's really questionable as to whether some of those labs have been adequate. Some are woefully inadequate."

"The science area has to be taken care of," board president Dean Swartzwelter said. "A lot of parents are really upset about this."

The board decided a few months ago that all district ninth graders should attend CEP and not the middle schools. Trustees allocated $200,000 from this year's budget to equip science labs and buy computers, supplies and desks.

They're seeking bids on the proposed renovations.

Schools: Film not influence in boy's death

By M.B. Dillon

There is no connection between the death of 8-year-old Stephen Nalepa and the showing of a film in the Plymouth-Canton school district, board president Dean Swartzwelter said Wednesday.

"The school district's investigation has disclosed no information to lead us to believe that a causal relationship existed between Stephen's viewing of this film and his death," Swartzwelter said from a prepared statement.

The children's parents, Larry and Debbie Nalepa, were present at the announcement. The couple was upset and declined to comment on the district's findings.

Debbie Nalepa, prior to the announcement, said she didn't want to comment on whether the family has filed a lawsuit against the district for showing a film the Nalepas believe may have contributed to the boy's March 24 hanging.

The movie, "Nobody's Useless," based on the 1896 book "The Great Brain" by John Fitzgerald, is the story of a handicapped boy who attempts suicide before realizing life is worth living. The film was withdrawn by its distributor, the Encyclopaedia Britannica, March 29.

"We're concentrating on our grieving process right now," Debbie Nalepa said. "This is not the time to discuss it (litigation)."

Swartzwelter refused to comment on reports that the district met with legal counsel or whether a lawsuit has been filed by the Nalepas.

School attorney Dennis Pollard said Tuesday he met with board members in executive session Monday to discuss the Nalepa case. Pollard said no communication has been received by the Nalepas.

Barbara Graham, a school board member, told the Observer the board discussed the incident and sought legal advice from Pollard on how to respond to a possible suit.

Canton Township police ruled last week that there was no evidence to show the boy committed suicide.

Group members differ over airport

By Diane Gale

Appointees to a new study committee looking at whether the township should buy Mettetal Airport come to the job from varied perspectives.

And that's just the way supervisor Tom Yack wanted it Tuesday when he recommended them to the board, which gave its unanimous approval.

"They may have a gut reaction to the airport as a lot of us do," Yack said. "We're also looking for someone to be open minded enough that as additional information comes forth they could change their opinion," he added.

'They may have a gut reaction to the airport as a lot of us do. We're also looking for someone to be open minded enough that as additional information comes forth they could change their opinion.'
— Tom Yack, township supervisor

A FINAL recommendation about whether the township should buy the airport is expected in four or five months.

The question is whether Mettetal should be municipally owned or whether the 64.4 acre land should be developed as light industrial.

State aviation officials said state and federal grants would pick up most of the costs, estimated at more than $3 million.

Pilots said the airport brings money into the community and Mettetal should be preserved, because smaller airports are becoming extinct.

Residents have argued that the planes make too much noise and that real estate agents say the land could be better used as light industrial. The land is zoned light industrial.

Yack's office picked 11 committee members from 20 volunteers.

Committee to review cable accord

By Diane Gale
staff writer

A cable committee has been established to monitor the pay TV services and prepare the community for upcoming contract negotiations.

The franchise agreement for Omnicom Cablevision, the cable company servicing Canton, expires in February 1995 and the township must begin the renewal process by February 1992 to make changes in the agreement, township officials said.

TRUSTEE PHIL LaJoy will serve a one-year term as committee chairman.

"I will be available for any input that they need in their process of learning about the cable industry," said Lisa Boland, Omnicom general manager.

"We'll look at where we've been, where we're going and how we can continue to meet customer needs into the future," she said.

'We'll look at where we've been, where we're going and how we can continue to meet customer needs into the future.'
— Lisa Boland, general manager, Omnicom

After the first few meetings, the committee will decide how it will field public cable complaints.

At Tuesday's board meeting trustees voted down a proposal to give the cable committee members $18.50 each month for as long as they serve. The entire cost to the township would have been $92.50 per month or more than $1,000 annually.

SUPERVISOR TOM Yack and trustee Bob Shefferly were in favor of giving the committee members the perk. Clerk Loren Bennett, Treasurer Gerald Brown and Trustee Elaine Kirchgatter were against the benefit. Trustees LaJoy and John Preniczky were absent.

"The rationale was that if they are monitoring the services we should provide the service," said Yack, later adding that the people he recommended for the committee were all avid cable watchers and experts in the field.

Brown said he objected to paying township commission members and that if the committee reaps special benefits then all committee members should get the same consideration.

The average Omnicom customer pays about $32 monthly, which includes basic television channels at $18.50; Home Box Office at $8.95; and between $3.50 and $6.50 for remote control, depending on where the subscriber lives.

Responsiblities will include keeping the board up to date on the contract renewal process and reporting to the board on Omnicom's performance.

The board voted unanimously to appoint the committee.

LaJoy, Canton trustee, will serve one year; Jim Kronberg, three years; Hal Winters, three years; Bill Simmerer, two years; and Dan Baldrica, two years.

School start anti-drug program this fall

By Kevin Brown
staff writer

An anti-drug program for children that has gained support throughout the country will be taught to all Plymouth-Canton fifth graders this fall.

While police heading the program are awaiting word on a grant to pay-75 percent of the cost, officials in Canton and Plymouth townships have agreed to pay for the program.

While officials in the city of Plymouth have not similarly agreed, citing budget constraints, Plymouth fifth graders will be included in the program.

The Drug Abuse Resistance Education program, DARE, was begun in 1983 by police and government officials in Los Angeles. The program seeks to warn kids of the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse, and to have kids understand that police officers are their friends.

It was sparked by the concept that stopping the supply and abuse of illegal drugs is nearly an impossible task, and that education can head off drug or alcohol abuse.

Uniformed officers will spend a day each week with kids in a given class, during the course of a semester. "We'll spend 45 minutes to an hour (of class time) with them," said Canton Police Officer Leonard Schemanske, who is coordinating the joint Plymouth-Plymouth Township-Canton program.

Besides teaching, officers eat lunch and go to recess with students to build friendship. The purpose is to have students see police more as friends, than as people to fear.

"DARE to me represents the single program with the most potential for breaking the cycle of substance abuse in our country," said Plymouth Police Chief Richard Myers.

While many solutions to drug abuse have been bandied about, Myers said "The only long term solution is eliminating the (drug) market through education. It is through raising a generation of kids who don't want to be substance abusers."

Plymouth Township Police Chief Carl Berry added that DARE "deals with education as opposed to enforcement."

"The parents in the parent-teacher organizations are really looking forward to it," Berry said.

The DARE program has been introduced to some Plymouth-Canton schools kids by Michigan State Police Trooper Robert Garcia, who has been presenting the program for two years.

The full-blown program to begin in fall will involve two officers teaching DARE full time and two officers teaching it part time.

The DARE program was introduced in the Livonia Public Schools in September 1988, and is now taught in all Livonia elementary and junior high schools, in public and private schools.

"It receives rave reviews in all the schools that have hosted the program to date, without exception, said Jay Young, supervisor of community relations for the Livonia Public Schools.

Schools take the DARE

"The parents are very supportive of the program and so are city officials," Young said, adding Livonia city council members or high police officials attend DARE graduation ceremonies.

Officers who apply to teach in the DARE program undergo a screening process and once selected, attend an 80-hour training course.

The program has been implemented in 49 states, involving more than 3 million students in more than 50,000 classrooms.

Airport study group members differ on sale

ONE MEMBER, Mildred Murphy, Pickwick homeowners president, said her neighbors complain about airplanes "buzzing" their houses, which are between Warren and Ford roads off of Lilley Road.

"Sometimes they sound like they're landing on our roofs," she said. "I know there are a lot of flyers who are nice and there's others who don't follow the rules. They shouldn't even be flying over our homes. I hope the study is beneficial to everyone."

Bob Olson, a committee member and a Realtor, has a different opinion.

"My personal feeling is to try and save it," said Olson adding that an airport would help industrial/office developments south of Joy and Lilley roads east to Haggerty Road.

"I see the airport as an asset to the community," he said. "It will take real solid evidence of why the airport needs to be closed down and something in its place."

Peter Bundarin, a Canton attorney, said he wants to answer a slew of questions and topping the list is whether there is a demand for the airport.

"I pass the airport almost everyday and to my recollection I've seen the fields filled with airplanes and now there are very few," he said. "I would have thought that with the growth in the area there also would have been growth there."

Another question, Bundarin said, is if the township takes control would it always have to maintain the land as an airport.

"I don't have a bias against the airport per se," he said.

Dan Barton, a builder, developer and real estate agent, said he has opinions in favor and against township ownership.

"How are we going to go about it?" he said. "We'll have to evaluate the recreational facilities and business facilities and whether it's advantageous for Canton to have it or if it will be cost prohibitive."

MIKE CLARK, in civil engineering management, and Jerry Jarvis, a systems analyst, said volunteering for the committee was a good chance to become involved in the community.

Clark said he wants to "make sure the township gets the best shake."

Ken Bennane, Richard Cebulak and Vic Gustafson declined to talk about their personal feelings regarding the airport.

The Observer was unable to reach Sam Marshall and James Darling.

A public hearing to field comments from residents will be at an undetermined date. If you wish to submit a comment before that hearing, write to Canton administrative assistant Dan Calabrese, 1550 S. Canton Center Road, Canton 48188.

Easter egg hunt planned

The Plymouth/Canton Jaycees will have their annual Easter egg hunt at 10 a.m. Saturday at Plymouth Township Park, at Ann Arbor Trail and McClumpha.

Children between 1 and 12 years old will participate. Parents are asked to bring their own containers for the eggs.

Drunk driving charged after close call

A 34-year-old Dearborn Heights man was arrested on a felony drunk driving charge Saturday after a near head-on collision with a Canton police officer.

The officer reported that he was driving east on Ford Road east of I-275 Saturday when he was face-to-face with the Dearborn Heights man, who was driving westbound in the eastbound lane.

The driver swerved to miss the officer, who immediately turned to follow the man who was by this time driving on the cement median under I-275.

His blood alcohol level was 0.13. A blood alcohol level of 0.10 in Michigan is considered drunk.

The felony charge was added, because the man has two previous drunk driving convictions, said Pat Nemecek, Canton public information officer.

FISH STORY: Two Northville teens were arrested for shoplifting at Meijers last weekend.

Security officers saw one of the teens slip fishing supplies into his pockets.

When Canton police arrived Meijers security retrieved $130 worth of fishing equipment.

CAR BREAK-INS: The owner of a white 1985 Chevy Camaro parked on Carriage Hills was reportedly broken into last weekend.

The stolen goods included a $300 AM-FM radio, speakers valued at $150 and a $500 golf club bag.

In another case, a car parked at Super Bowl on Ford Road was reportedly broken into last weekend.

A $115 pair of mirror type sun glasses was stolen from a 1988 Ford Ranger pickup. Damage to the car included a $200 windshield and a $25 car mirror, police reported.

TOOLS TAKEN: The owner of a home on east Roundtable told police that tools and a radio were stolen from the family's garage last weekend. More than $300 worth of goods were reportedly stolen.

Schools: Film not influence in death

Parents of Gallimore students and others angry over Stephen Nalepa's death and how the district has handled the matter attended Monday night's school board meeting.

One parent, Wendy Sielaff, said the district has committed an atrocity.

"We were never informed this movie would be shown. To this day, no one has taken time to send a note home saying, 'Your daughter has seen this movie.'

"It grieves my spirit heavily to send my four children to Plymouth-Canton Community Schools when irresponsible, negligent people are at the helm of this district.

"The casket may be closed on Stephen Nalepa but we are not closing the case on Stephen Nalepa," Sielaff said. "We will not allow it."

Sielaff attended the press conference Wednesday and demanded the district provide a time and place for all parents to see the movie. She said the board keeps putting off parents on the issue.

Swartzwelter said the distributor has withdrawn the film and the district will need to see if it's available. He said parents may get to see it after spring break. "I'd like to know when and why my daughter was seen by a grievance counselor without our permission," Mike Sielaff told board members Monday.

"I'd also like to know if this movie was seen in conjunction with the Michigan Model on feelings."

The Michigan Model is a state health curriculum addressing such subjects as emotional and mental health, disease, nutrition and substance abuse.

Jennifer Weil-Henson, a graduate of Plymouth-Canton schools, called the district's handling of the Nalepa incident appalling.

"I believe in this school district and the competency of its teachers. But to this day, I don't understand why 'Nobody's Useless' was shown," she said.

"I went to Stephen Nalepa's funeral and it was the most horrible thing I've ever seen. We still don't know what was going through Stephen Nalepa's head. But somehow, you do.

"Parents weren't told before or after that this movie would be shown. The Nalepas didn't even know until they saw it on the news."

Graham said the parents should be able to see the movie.

Relief for PMS Symptoms

PMS stands for premenstrual syndrome – a group of emotional, physical, and behavioral symptoms that affect many women. Specific symptoms include, but are not limited to, depression, anger, irritability, breast tenderness, headache, bloating, and changes in normal sleep patterns and appetite. Nondrug approaches to PMS include dietary changes, exercise, stress reduction techniques, and family member support.

Prescription medicines: Progesterone and oral contraceptive medicines have been used to modify or delay the menstrual cycle. Pain relievers such as naproxen and mefenamic acid decrease the production of prostaglandins – substances which may be in excess when PMS symptoms occur. Diuretics such as spironolactone may help control the bloating and breast pain that often occur just prior to menstruation. Tricyclic antidepressants such as nortripyline may help ease premenstrual depression.

Nonprescription medicines: Aspirin, acetaminophen, and ibuprofen provide relief of pain. Pyridoxine (vitamin B-6) is included in some nonprescription medicines based on the theory that this vitamin suppresses the production of prolactin, a hormone found in high levels in some PMS sufferers.

Crowded schedule fills day at school

By M.B. Dillon
staff writer

Members of the Plymouth-Canton school board took their tour of the two high schools during evening hours, but Carey Couturier, a sophomore at Plymouth-Canton High School takes her tour every day.

"I think they should come during the school day so they can see how crowded the halls and bathrooms are. With the ninth graders next year, it's going to be too much," she said.

Friday was a typical day for Couturier, who attends classes at both Canton and Salem.

● First hour: Couturier and her fellow humanities students were joined by a second class to watch "Ben Hur." Chairs were placed in the aisles to accommodate everyone.

No textbooks are used in the class. Handouts and other materials are used instead.

"THIS IS one of the smaller writing classes and it's still way too large," said Dvorsky. "Most English teachers think the maximum should be in the high teens or low twenties. Writing classes require more individualized attention."

Dvorsky anticipates that housing ninth graders at CEP will mean teachers won't have use of as many classrooms during planning periods. Bathroom facilities, already inadequate, will become more of a problem, he said.

"The building was constructed poorly," said Dvorsky. Bathrooms are so few and so crowded that teachers resort to using whichever restroom is available, regardless of whether it's the men's or women's room. "It's ridiculous," said Dvorsky.

Several of Dvorksy's students say there isn't room for ninth graders at CEP.

"My second hour teacher doesn't have a room. He has to move from room to room," said Tim Sylvester.

A BIG complaint among students is overcrowded cafeterias. At Salem, students routinely eat on the floor.

"You have to wait in line 20 minutes to get fries or pizza," said Sylvester.

"The lunchroom is madness," agreed Canton senior Ryan Gross. "I can leave fourth hour, so I eat at home or at Taco Bell."

Tax-break policy to get review

is one criteria that will be used in a new policy expected to go before the board this month.

THE NEW policy also draws a set of criteria that gives businesses bonus points for certain characteristics, like ownership versus leasing and offering more jobs in the community. Previously, most tax abatement applications were approved in full with rubber stamp ease.

The new policy will say some companies don't qualify at all, Yack said. However, the abatement must remain at 50 percent as required by state law.

"Bonus points will be given if you came from outside the state of Michigan and more bonus points if you came from outside the United States," Yack said. "We're not interested in stealing light industrial from area communities. We are interested in stealing from Ohio, or Indiana or any place for that matter."

Tax abatements affect the Plymouth-Canton School District, which also receives 50 percent of the taxes.

Canton officials have granted about 43 tax breaks of 50 percent for a full 12 years to companies like Miesel-Sysco Food Co., American Yazaki Corp., Procoil Corp. and Meer Dental.

"Early on tax abatements were probably necessary in getting businesses, in terms of light industrial," Yack said. "Now we think we can back off a little."

Hospital plans expansion

By LeAnne Rogers
staff writer

Plans for a new medical building and entrance to Garden City Hospital will be going before the Garden City City Council Monday.

A 50,000-square-foot medical building, with three stories above ground and one below, is planned immediately east of the hospital. The new medical building will be attached to the main building.

"The existing medical office building out front was built in 1962 and we've outgrown it," said Allan Breakie, the hospital's retired chief executive officer and current consultant.

"The existing building is cramped. the physicians don't have space to work," he added. "There isn't enough waiting space. The new building will fit the physician needs and community needs."

Once the new building is completed, Breakie said all the physicians working in the existing building will relocate.

"When the physicians move, there will be some vacant space (in the new building). There will be room for growth," he said. "The new building will provide limited ancillary offices for the hospital on the basement level."

ONCE THE existing medical building is vacated, Breakie said he expects it will be used for non-patient care operations, including second floor housing for medical students.

Medical students from the hospital have been housed until recently in the historic nearby Stewart House which will demolished to accommodate the hospital's parking needs.

Neither Garden City nor private parties were able to follow through with proposals to move the historic farmhouse to another site and restore it.

"It would be a lifetime job to restore the house. The city took a good look at it," said Breakie. The city estimated costs to move the house at $60,000, which didn't include acquisition of a new site.

The hospital has also acquired a church and adjoining land along Maplewood. Breakie said the church building will be left but the parsonage will be moved by May 1 to the church's new site in Westland.

"We hope that we can satisfy the parking needs. I'm not sure what we will do with the church," he said. "We might use it for child care or offices. After three or four years, there is a strong chance we will demolish the church."

THE $6 million project also includes construction of a new hospital lobby and entryway, along with renovation of the admitting and business offices.

"This will allow cars to pull right up to the entrance and drop people off," Breakie said. "What we have is most inadequate. Its been a problem for four or five years."

The construction on the entrance and lobby will blend with the new medical building, updating and upgrading the hospital's appearance, Breakie said.

The hospital will also be more visible from Inkster Road, he said, with the nearby Stewart House and trees along the street removed.

This is the ninth time the hospital has undergone an expansion, Breakie said, and the sixth major project.

GARDEN CITY Hospital originally opened in 1951 on Ford Road and moved to its current site at Inkster just south of Maplewood in 1960. Opening with 102 beds, the hospital currently has 323 beds.

Hospital officials point with pride to the fact that three and four generations of Garden City area families have been served by the hospital.

Breakie estimated that once the hospital gets final approval from Garden City, construction would take 13 months.

"We started on this internally on this and have been really pulling since January 1989," he said. "The next step will be the emergency room."

Board ratifies teacher contract

Teacher contract signed, sealed and delivered

The Plymouth-Canton Board of Education voted unanimously to ratify a three-year contract with district teachers Monday night.

The expedited agreement, which teachers ratified last month, gives pay increases of 5 percent, 4 percent and 5 percent and an additional cost of living adjustment of a maximum 3 percent annually over the next three years. The current contract runs through June.

"I think we owe some gratitude to the I CARE Committee people," said Trustee Barbara Graham. "We wouldn't have been able to negotiate this contract if the community didn't say yes to the millage and the I CARE people in the election last year.

"They should be commended for their work."

"It's been a long process that really started at the end of last summer," said Board president Dean Swartzwelter. "I'm pleased the process has led us to an agreement that will take us through June, 1993."

Canton resident Michael Spencer objected to terms of the contract.

"I work at an automotive company, and our pay raises have been delayed 12-18 months," Spencer said.

Appointee faces 2 challengers in board race

By Todd Schneider
staff writer

Two applicants who missed out on appointment to a vacant Wayne-Westland school board seat last December will challenge newly appointed trustee Leonard Posey in the June 11 election.

Posey, Linda Pratt and Laurel Rasanen filed candidate petitions with the district elections office before the 4 p.m. Monday deadline.

A fourth potential candidate, Walter Warren, was disqualified for coming up two short of the required 20 signatures from registered voters, said Eleanor Harrington, district elections clerk.

The district serves southeast Canton.

Posey, 35, of Inkster is the first black person to serve on the board. He was appointed to the board seat vacated last December by Terri Reighard Johnson after her election to the Westland City Council.

Posey, vice president and director of human resources for Independence National Bank, said last month he would seek a new term when his current one expired in June.

"WHEN I WAS appointed in December, I was asked if I would run again in June," Posey said Monday. "I wanted to reserve the right to make that decision after I assessed my commitment to be a positive contributing force."

The biggest problem facing the board is resolving the district's current financial crisis, Posey said. The district is facing a $7 million deficit (without applying its current $2 million reserve) next fall, school officials said.

"As a parent with two children in school and as a member of the board I would like to spend more time talking about positive kinds of things, rather than having to defend and explain ourselves for funding," Posey said.

Pratt, a business woman long active in PTA, was one of three finalists among 17 applicants for Johnson's seat.

"I've been involved as a volunteer for a long time," Pratt said Monday. "I feel I've done most of the things I could do on that level, and I see this (a board seat) as another opportunity to accomplish some things."

Narrowly missing the appointment in December was a factor in her decision, Pratt said. "It's early in the campaign, but I think I have a good shot."

RAISENAN SAID Monday there were several reasons why she chose to run for a seat on the board. "As a parent, I think I can make some improvements if I become part of the decision-making process."

Raisenan attends board meetings regularly and is a member of the Wayne-Westland Citizens for Education Committee, formed last year to promote quality education and encourage participation on school issues by district residents.

She is an Observer & Eccentric Newspapers production department employee.

The committee actively opposed three tax-increase proposals that were defeated by voters in a Feb. 8 special election.

The district could put any or all of the proposals up for a second vote on the June 11 ballot. The school board has an April 30 deadline for approving ballot language.

Raisanen said Monday she made the decision to run for the school board on her own and she wouldn't ask the committee for its endorsement. "If people want to support me individually, that's fine."

The group hasn't made a decision yet on whether it will endorse any candidate in the election, said committee chairman Dave Morganty.

"Possibly, we will endorse someone. It's (allowed) in our bylaws."

Students campaigning for tax increase

By C.L. Rugenstein
staff writer

Students continued their public demand of a millage increase Monday at a Wayne-Westland school board meeting. They want a tax proposal put on the June 11 election ballot.

The defeat of three millage proposals in a Feb. 8 special election created a projected budget deficit of $5-7 million for the school district.

The district serves southeast Canton.

The students protested program cuts that would eliminate sports, band, forensics and dramatics programs from the schools, and vowed support in campaigning for another millage proposal.

'The way to fix the problem is to get the millage back on the ballot. We want to do whatever it takes to get it passed.'

—Jon Molnar
John Glenn High School

"The way to fix the problem is to get the millage back on the ballot," said Jon Molnar, representing John Glenn High School's football team. "We want to do whatever it takes to get it passed. The whole of John Glenn would fall apart without it."

Jenny Becher and two friends from Stevenson Junior High School read a prepared statement urging and supporting the school board on the millage issue.

THEY ALSO suggested a campaign for "citizen awareness of how the school finance formula works, a letter-writing campaign to local papers, and going door to door."

Jenny also urged that students and parents write to Gov. James Blanchard, Senate Majority Leader John Engler (R-Mount Pleasant) and other state legislators demanding a reform in school financing.

Earth Day '90

For these folks, it begins at home

ART EMANUELE/staff photographer

Keeping the air clean is Dennis Piper's key objective. The Redford resident has campaigned against the Detroit incinerator.

Earth Day — Sunday, April 22 — is likely to witness an outpouring of pro-environment sentiment unseen since the early 1970s.

From Washington to Los Angeles, environmentalists, elected officials and movie stars will speak out on environmental issues ranging from the erosion of the ozone layer to global warming, from toxic oil spills to acid rain.

But the environmental movement isn't just a gathering of scientists and celebrities, nor are its issues as remote as the Brazilian rain forest. In almost every town, there are people who are doing their thing — quietly — to preserve and protect the earth's resources.

They could be your neighbor, your friend, your child's teacher or even a member of your city council. Here are some of the people from western Wayne County who are making the environment a personal priority.

Activist

Every time Dennis Piper sees the smokestacks he sees danger — and a wasted opportunity.

"I'm disappointed that they didn't hear what we were saying — but we had no illusion they would," said Piper, long active in the fight to block the Detroit Incinerator.

The Redford resident made it his duty to contact experts from far and wide, getting them to testify against the controversial trash-burning plant.

"First, I had to educate myself and when I did, I couldn't help but become involved," he said.

LATELY, he's also been making it his duty to carry the banner for recycling. Piper sits on three local and regional recycling task forces.

"As environmentalists, our ethic is that if you're opposed to something, you must come up with a viable alternative," said Piper, a member of the environmental group Sierra Club. "We have that alternative and it's recycling."

The Detroit Incinerator is the area's hottest — and most expensive — environmental controversy, dividing environmentalists and governmental officials.

Even such environmentally aware leaders as county Commisioner Milton Mack, a recycling booster who helps oversee solid waste issues, have drafted statements supporting the incinerator as a safe, inevitable option in meeting the area's waste disposal needs.

But for Piper, the incinerator is a risky venture whose time is gone. He plans to be there April 17 when the Michigan Air Pollution Control Commission issues its opinion on the trash-burning plant. The commission will decide whether the plant has laid out an adequate plan to bring emissions into compliance, or whether to move toward denying a permanent operating permit for the facility.

"Right now," he said, "it doesn't look good for the incinerator."

His love for the environment, Piper said, began early. Growing up in the hills of western Pennsylvania, he was always close to the outdoors.

SINCE THEN Piper, a writer and freelance television producer, has made environmental issues a key subject of his work.

During the first Earth Day, in 1970, Piper was in the Air Force, stationed in California. "Really, I don't remember much about it (Earth Day) at all."

Yet Piper believes in Earth Day's goals, that environmental policy must spring from a grass-roots movement.

"With the incinerator, my concern was science," he said. "We went in with the belief that if the science was good, the right steps would be taken. But that's not always the case. Sometimes, it takes more."

Councilwoman

She doesn't see herself as an activist — and scoffs at talk about being a trend-setter — but Mary Jane Schildberg can't recall a time when preserving the environment wasn't one of her everyday responsibilities.

"I guess it comes from growing up in a rural setting," the Maine native said. "We were really isolated, so we had to make do, we had to recycle."

Now, she's spreading that philosophy as a two-term Garden City councilwoman. "I made the environment a part of my campaign last time," she said. "I think it's inevitable that we'll a recycling program of our own," she said.

BUT SHE'S not content to wait for the city to take action. For Schildberg, the road to a clean environment begins in her own back yard — literally.

"We have a lot of trees in our yard, so rather than bagging them and shipping them off we long ago decided to build a compost pile," said Schildberg, an organic gardening enthusiast.

"There are some open lots in our subdivision, so right now we're trying to start a neighborhood compost pile," she said.

Even without a city program, she and her husband — Lee Schildberg, a physician — have taken it upon themselves to recycle glass, cans and plastics.

Like Piper, she can barely recall what she was doing on Earth Day 1970. ("I suppose I was doing something with my Scout troop," she said.)

THE MOTHER of two, Schildberg said her sons' Boy Scout projects helped spur family interest in recycling.

Their goal: clean environment

When it comes to environmental issues, John Covert likes to jump in with both feet. Here, the Livonia Schools teacher removes a junked tire from the waters of the Rouge River.

"I remember one time we hung a clean handkerchief outside for about six weeks to check on air pollution," Schilberg recalled. "You couldn't believe how dirty that thing was when we finally pulled it in."

While that early environmental project helped spur family interest in the environment, Schildberg also looks to it as a small sign of hope.

"The air quality around here has gotten a lot better since then," she said. "It shows things can get better."

Teacher

When it comes to the environment, John Covert likes to jump in with both feet. The Livonia Churchill High School teacher has been known to wade into the murky Rouge River to clear logjams during the annual summertime river cleanup.

But it wasn't always that way. Despite a lifelong interest in the outdoors — and a long career as a science teacher — Covert didn't become personally involved with environmental issues until something close to his heart was threatened.

"When they talked about tearing down part of Holliday Park (a nature preserve straddling the Westland/Livonia/Canton Township limits), then I decided to get involved," Covert said.

Plans to convert a portion of the preserve into a golf course were quickly scuttled, much to Covert's relief.

"I'd hate to see anything happen to it. I've taken classes out there to teach them about nature," he said.

COVERT, with partner Ben Ray, supervises Churchill's students in the area-wide Rouge River education project. In the classroom, and the after-school Rouge project, Covert said he's careful to teach, not preach.

"That's the dilemma we face as environmental teachers. You want to pass along an appreciation for the environment, but you also want students to make their own decisions," he said. "At the same time, though the situation frequently looks gloomy, you want to give the students some hope for the future — at least the feeling they can make a difference."

The Rouge project "is a great morale booster," Covert said. "Last year, we had about 200 students participate in the cleanup. You'd see kids who sat back all year long finally getting involved in something."

If there's anything that worries Covert, it's that today's young people seem distant from their environment.

"The outdoors was a big part of my childhood," said the Livonia native, still an avid outdoorsman. "Today, you don't even see kids outside playing ball."

STUDENTS participating the the Rouge project say the environment does matter. And their reasons for involvement aren't all that different from Covert's.

"You look around here and see all the development that's been going on and you feel you have to protect what's left," said Livonia student Scott Westover.

The future

Amy Johnsod agrees that not enough young people are aware of environmental issues. That's why the Livonia teenager and her friends decided to form Stand Up, a new environmental club at her high school.

"There really wasn't any information around the school — especially with Earth Day coming up — so we decided to do something about it," she said.

FACULTY ADVISER John Bott said the best thing about the club is that it's student-directed. "They came to me," the Churchill High School English teacher said. "Initially, I put them off just to test their determination, but this is something they really wanted."

Johnson plans on participating in Earth Day activities, but doesn't know quite what to expect.

The first Earth Day, she said, "was something from another time."

"It was a different era then," she said. "I guess it was pretty wild."

Controversial movie pulled

By Casey Hans
staff writer

Farmington Public Schools has removed a controversial movie from its district media center shelves after concern that it may have led to an 8-year-old Canton Township boy's hanging March 24.

Meanwhile, Encyclopaedia Britannica Educational Corp. in Chicago has pulled distribution of the film because of the controversy.

"We had this film in our district. When we heard about this incident, we pulled it from the shelves," said Farmington superintendent Michael Flanagan, responding to Gill Elementary parent Kathy Webb's question at the school board meeting on Tuesday.

"We were very, very concerned. We dropped everything that day. We're pulling it . . . for obvious reasons," he added.

STEPHEN NALEPA, 8, of Canton Township, was found by his 10-year-old brother, Jason, with a belt around his neck and hanging from the upper level of the boy's bunkbed.

The Wayne County Medical Examiner's office ruled the boy's death "undeterminable." A police investigation continues into his death, said John Santomauro, Canton director of public safety.

The day before his death, the second grader had seen the film "Nobody's Useless," in which an infection causes a boy to lose his leg. Depressed, he attempts suicide twice until a friend convinces him life is worth living.

Police and Stephen's parents are concerned the film may have prompted the boy to mimic it.

IN FARMINGTON, the film was checked out of the district media center "several times" in the past few years, but has always been shown to "age appropriate" groups of students, Flanagan said. Encyclopaedia Britannica recommends the film for students in grades four through nine.

He also said it is the Farmington district's policy to preview films before they are shown to students. In Canton, staff at Gallimore Elementary School said the film had not been previewed before being shown.

"We have tremendous emphathy for the parents in this case," Flanagan said. "And for a school district which took a reputable film by a reputable firm . . . and possibly made an error in judgment."

Staff writer Mary Washko contributed to this report.

Crowds fill typical school day

● Lunch. In Canton's cafeteria, it's a challenge for Couturier and her friends to make their way through a sea of students to buy their lunches and find a place to sit together. "Five or 10 minutes after the hour begins, you can't even get in there," said Christy Teeter, a Canton junior.

"It's so crowded you can barely get in line," Couturier said.

"They should build another school, and they have to build it soon," said Salem sophomore Sarah Stubblefield. "That's what the millage is for."

Pam Brown, a Canton sophomore, said, "The school is way over-populated.

"You can't find a place to eat, so you have to sit on the floor. Plus there are so many students in classes the teacher can't even help you."

● Fourth hour: Harry Greanya is Couturier's biology teacher. His classes range in size from 28-32. All can be accommodated, if he uses a small lab area off the main room.

● Fifth hour: Mike McCauley is Couturier's Close Up (government) teacher. He, and other teachers who use the Canton library, are concerned that a resource room off the library used for lectures for large groups will be converted to a writing lab next year.

THE RESOURCE room is in demand.

"It's usually booked two or three weeks in advance. It's extremely competitive," says McCauley.

Canton's library once occupied two levels. The second floor has been converted to offices and classrooms. The language lab, formerly on the second level, has been removed.

"We have seating in this library for 113. That's not enough for a school of 2,200," said media specialist Jennie Porter.

With the ninth graders, enrollment at CEP is expected to be somewhere between 4,400 and 4,500.

● Sixth hour: Show Choir. Couturier is one of 12 students who successfully auditioned for the class taught by David Jorlett.

Couturier says that even though her classes are "fairly good size, I learn a lot. My classes aren't as large as some others. I got really lucky. My classes are average or smaller than average."

Officials expect local boost if Metro lands new plant

By Wayne Peal
staff writer

Add two local communities to the list of supporters for Wayne County's plan to bring an airplane refurbishing plant to Metro Airport.

Officials in Westland and Canton expect a boost in their own development if Metro lands the hotly sought refurbishing plant.

"We have several industrial parks and we're within a 9-to-10 mile radius of the airport, so I'm sure we'd benefit," Westland economic development director Scott Veldhuis said. "Really, this kind of thing can't help but boost development."

Canton Township Supervisor Thomas Yack agreed. "Anything that boosts development at the airport will have a positive effect," he said.

Wayne County Executive Edward McNamara said he expected the plant to produce 4,000 jobs — 1,200 at the Romulus plant itself, 2,800 more in related industries in nearby communities.

Northwest Airlines would operate the plant, to be used in overhauling a series of European-built jets acquired by the airline. The 1,200 plant employees would earn an estimated $52,000 a year by the end of the decade.

USING AN estimated $263 million in incentives, Wayne County is trying to lure NWA Inc. the airline's parent company, to build the plant at Metro.

In perhaps the most controversial part of the proposal, the county would make vacant airport land available at almost no cost to the airline.

"That land would have stood there anyway," McNamara said. "The benefits of having this at Metro far outweigh any objections."

Wayne County is in competition with Minneapolis-St. Paul — home base for NWA and the nominal front runner — Milwaukee and Memphis for the $200 million facility. NWA officials are expected to announce their choice before the end of the year.

Advantages to the Metro site, according to McNamara, include its low cost and the speed with which NWA could erect buildings.

"Our environmental impact statement has already been approved (by the Federal Aviation Administration)," McNamara said. "So, there should be no delays."

INITIAL CONSTRUCTION could be completed as soon as 1992, McNamara said, with full construction a reality by 1996.

Metro is a major Northwest hub, handling domestic and international flights.

Tax breaks from the city of Romulus, lease savings and low interest bonds from the county and job training grants from the state are part of the package.

The county would charge $1 a year on a 30-year lease, McNamara said.

The county would also seek sales tax and user fee exemptions during the construction period.

In all, NWA would save an estimated $263 million in taxes, lease and investment costs, compared with what the project would cost without the exemptions.

An additional $4.5 million has been pledged by local financial institutions and moving firms to help relocate Northwest workers, McNamara said. On-site child care services would also be provided.

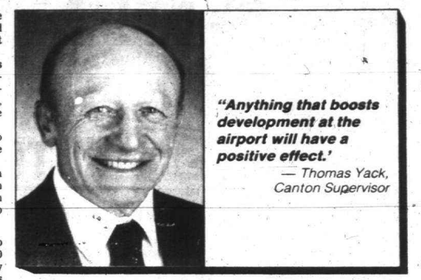
Area trade unions have also pledged to avoid striking during the plant's construction.

The airline would be given a choice of three airport parcels. An industrial park could be built on nearby land, McNamara said, to house parts suppliers.

THE PLANT would be used to convert a new aircraft, the A320 Airbus, being brought into service by Northwest. Seven hangars, a series of sheet metal, fiberglass and paint shops would be included in the plant.

Various parts of the plan require approval from either the state Legislature, Wayne County Commissoon or Romulus City Council.

Regardless of the outcome, $195 million in roadway improvements and a new terminal and runways are already planned for Metro.



"Anything that boosts development at the airport will have a positive effect.'
— Thomas Yack, Canton Supervisor

"And regardless of the outcome, both Canton and Westland expect to see some economic growth tied to the airport.

"We've been meeting in a task force with other nearby communities (including Romulus, Van Buren and Brownstown townships, among others), to see what we could do to promote ourselves, not only nationally but internationally," Yack said. "Anything that would improve Metro's status as a Northwest hub is welcome."

Senate OKs higher ed aid package

By Tim Richard
staff writer

The Michigan Senate has voted 15 universities state aid increases averaging 5.3 percent and 29 community colleges an average of 5 percent for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

"We've moved toward a formula approach — more equal per-student," said Sen. R. Robert Geake, R-Northville, vice chair of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The higher education bill passed last week on a 29-2 vote, with all area senators supporting it, and was sent to the House.

SENATE REPUBLICAN leaders twitted House Democrats on their lack of action.

"Once again this chamber has taken the lead," said Senate majority leader John Engler, R-Mount Pleasant.

The Legislature recessed for a two-week Easter break. But Engler, a gubernatorial candidate, suggested the House stay in session to complete its work.

Added appropriations chairman Harry Gast, R-St. Joseph: "This is the last of the Senate budget bills except capital outlay. We have not received a single bill from the House."

OAKLAND UNIVERSITY was voted a 5.4 percent increase to $36.7 million or $5,406 per full time equated student (FYES).

University of Michigan Dearborn is scheduled for a 9.7 percent increase to $18.2 million or $3,604 per FYES.

Wayne State University is scheduled for only a 4.4 percent boost to $181.7 million. Its $7,925 per FYES is highest in the state.

The University of Michigan's Ann Arbor main campus was allocated a 4.8 percent increase to $253.7 million, highest grant in the state, amounting to $7,609 per FYES.

Michigan State University was raised 5.6 percent to $213.3 million or $6,002 per FYES.

Eastern Michigan, one of the major growth schools, was voted a 7 percent increase to $63.3 million or $3,574 per FYES.

THE COMMUNITY colleges were voted a total of $223 million. It was about the same amount recommended by Gov. James J. Blanchard, but the Senate cut some of the higher individual increases and raised some of the lower ones.

Oakland Community College was voted a 5.04 percent increase to $15.5 million.

Schoolcraft College was raised nearly 4 percent to $7.9 million. Originally it was scheduled for only 2.9 percent.

Wayne County Community College — serving Detroit and the nearby suburbs — was voted a 3.46 percent aid increase to $12.8 million. In addition, it gets a $10 million "tax grant" because it has no voted property tax.

Schoolcraft College was raised nearly 4 percent to $7.9 million. Originally it was scheduled for only 2.9 percent.

Breakfast features Pierce

Warren Pierce, host of WJR's "Mid-day Magazine," will be the keynote speaker at the 16th annual Livonia Prayer Breakfast at 7:30 a.m. Wednesday, May 2, in Roma's of Livonia. Tickets are $6 per person and available by calling Madonna College, 591-5044, or the Livonia Chamber of Commerce, 427-2122. A long-time member of WJR's air team, Pierce is a native Detroiter who attended the University of Michigan and Wayne State University. Musical selections at the breakfast will be performed by the Ladywood High School Choir.

Nalepa case

Schools violate public trust

THE PLYMOUTH-CANTON school board hasn't done anybody any favors in the manner in which it has handled the death of Stephen Nalepa, a student who was found hanged in his home recently.

The Nalepa family has laid part of the blame on the schools, saying their son could have gotten the idea from a movie shown in school on the Friday before his death.

The film, "Nobody's Useless," depicts the plight of a boy who loses his leg to an infection and then attempts suicide twice, once by hanging, because he feels useless.

We suspect the situation will end up in the civil courts. And so does the school board, which went into executive session this week to discuss the legal ramifications of the death.

That discussion should have been conducted in public. The school board closed its meeting, saying that it could go into executive session to discuss pending legal matters. However, a suit has not been filed by the Nalepa family to discuss.

We think the board was getting around the state's Open Meetings Act with its actions.

But there's more than just the act that the board was skirting. There were dozens of parents at the meeting, concerned about the child's death. And by going behind closed doors, the board was refusing to air the issue.

But that's not the only time the board has skirted the Open Meetings Act. Recently school board members gathered to watch the movie, "Nobody's Useless," in the wake of the death.

Four school board members were scheduled to attend the screening. The school board has seven members, and when four are present there is a quorum, which means that the board could take action on an issue. Such meetings are open to the public.

Prior to the screening, the school officials were confronted by an Observer reported who asked that the paper be allowed to attend the screening because it would be a legal board meeting.

After that confrontation, school officials changed the screening schedule, and one board member attended another viewing of the movie.

We can understand the school district's worries about possible civil litigation and its caution when dealing with the death of a student.

However, we think the public deserves an explanation of the movie and the situation.

Board tour

Crowding not seen at night

WE COMMEND Plymouth-Canton school board members for taking the initiative to tour Centennial Educational Park to gain a better understanding of the overcrowding problem there.

It's unfortunate, however, that board members and administrators didn't visit the high schools during the day. Had they done so, they would be in a better position to appreciate why many teachers and students think housing ninth graders at CEP next year is an ill-advised move.

Currently, three-fifths of the district's ninth graders attend the high schools. The board decided recently that all ninth graders should be enrolled there.

Many teachers and students say district officials aren't paying enough attention to the problems presented by adding 450 students, 20 staff members and six portable classrooms at CEP.

Enrollment at CEP is expected to be somewhere between 4,400 and 4,500 in 1990-91.

An example of the problem often arises in the meeting room at the board office.

MONDAY NIGHT'S meeting was well-attended, which meant many parents and students were forced to stand in the hallways. They had to strain to hear the proceedings. They couldn't even see the board table.

Last year, at the request of administration, a group of parents formed the Committee Researching Educational Workings. CREW was charged with studying the district's strengths and weaknesses.

The night CREW presented its findings, trustees arrived at the board office to find their tables, normally arranged in the shape of a horseshoe, rearranged to accommodate a larger audience in the cramped meeting room.

CREW members gave the district high marks in several areas. But a weakness it expressed concern about was school officials' failure to communicate effectively with the community.

While the district has made strides, it needs to do a better job relating to students, parents, staff and residents. After all, they're affected by every action, or lack of action, the administration takes. They deserve to be listened to.

One parent addressed the board a few weeks ago and made the point well.

"We are real people with real needs," she said.

The statement should be remembered. The result would be a better educational community for all.

Death penalty

Too much power for government

CHRISTIANS observe this Friday as the day when capital punishment was inflicted on Jesus of Nazareth. Biblical accounts indicate Jesus did nothing that we would consider a capital crime. Indeed, the chief Roman official, Pilate, said as much:

"I find no crime deserving of death in him. I will therefore chastise and release him."

Bowing to political pressure, however, Pilate ordered capital punishment, illustrating why the death penalty is too much power to give government.

Michigan got a bad taste in its mouth for the death penalty in its territorial days when a man wrongly convicted in neighboring Ontario was hanged. We are proud Michigan became the first English-speaking jurisdiction in the world to prohibit the death penalty.

A Macomb County-based group is circulating petitions to amend the Michigan Constitution to allow the death penalty. Their simple faith that government will kill only the right people is touching but naive.

Most judges try to be fair and honest human beings (see editorial below), but they are human, and humans do make mistakes. The death penalty is too much power to give government.

Say no to the petition drive and to the spirit of Pilate.

Press limits

They shouldn't be widely used

IT IS TIME simultaneously to praise 48th District Court Judge Edward Avadenka while cautioning other judges about adopting Avadenka's approach to a recent case.

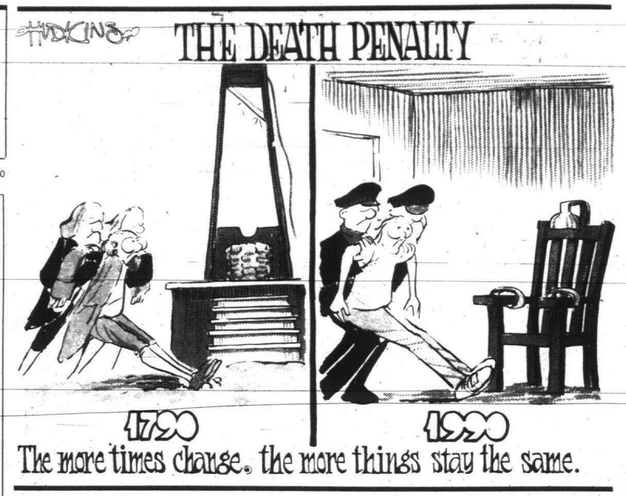
The robbery and murder case of West Bloomfield resident Ralph Schultz landed in Avadenka's Bloomfield Township courtroom. Avadenka took several steps prior to the preliminary examination that, carried any further, would have looked like prior censorship.

For example, just before a hospital bedside arraignment of one defendant, Avadenka ordered the press to neither take nor print the defendant's picture. He cited two reasons: Schultz's widow had not yet identified the defendant in a lineup, and it would jeopardize the defendant's right to a fair trial.

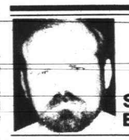
The First Amendment prohibits prior censorship. However, since we do believe in everyone's right to a fair trial, and since Adell Courts was in custody and not an at-large danger to the public, which would have made the public's right to know paramount, we did not print a picture of Courts.

Likewise, Avadenka called together media representatives two days before the pretrial of Courts and another defendant, William McMichael. Avadenka wanted to establish ground rules for coverage; he reminded us the law gave him extensive powers about courtroom coverage.

Particularly in trials of such emotional magnitude and community impact, but even in smaller cases, we believe the public has a compeling and overriding right to know how the judicial process is working. We will take this opportunity, in this instance, to compliment Avadenka on his approach to media coverage. However, concern about applying these measures in the same even-handed way, and our unwillingness to endorse such precedent, prohibits us from recommending this course of action in other circumstances.



Exploiting a tragedy menaces our liberty



Steve Barnaby

THE TARGETS could have been Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," Carson McCullers' "The Heart is A Lonely Hunter," or The Bible.

That's what I thought about after reading of the hysteria which has overtaken one school district, is spreading to others and threatens the intellectual freedom of our educational system.

It's a tragic and frightening tale.

A young boy in the Plymouth/Canton School District dies, found hanging from his bunkbed, only 8 years-old.

That's tragic.

Word gets out that a few days before the boy, along with his classmates, watched a movie entitled "Nobody's Useless," a work distributed by Encyclopaedia Britannica and based on the book "The Great Brain."

Published in 1896, the book revolves around the story of a boy who is depressed after losing his leg and attempts suicide twice. Neither attempt is successful.

It's a classic story, used for years in classrooms, sold in children's bookstores, very likely at your local library. As a child you probably read it. School district's rent the movie and show it as an example of how to cope in adversity.

Now it has become a target of those who limit our children's educational growth.

A GROWING NUMBER of parents in the district believe the movie may have led to the boy's death. Lurking on the sidelines are the champions of censorship who would love to get all the mileage possible out of this tragedy.

Some educational administrators have shown less than courageous conduct. Oakland County's Farmington District has pulled it off the shelf, "for obvious reasons," according to superintendent Michael Flanagan.

Encyclopaedia Britannica has halted film distribution because of the controversy.

But the reason for pulling the film is neither obvious or wise. It's frightening and dangerous.

In the last 94 years, millions of children have read the book. Since distribution in 1980, the movie has been seen by more than 1 million children. Less than a month ago students in the Rochester School District saw the film.

Cooler heads prevailed in that district. Letters were written to parents explaining that students had seen the film. Hopefully it will be shown again.

The pieces mentioned at the beginning of this column all contain stories of suicide. All are must reading for our children's literary development.

As tragic as is Stephen Nalepa's death, we must not react by withholding the intellectual food which nourishes our children's learning. That would be suicidal to our society.

Those mavens of censorship are having a field day with this issue, all too anxious to ride this tragedy to victory for their cause.

It is time for those to speak out who believe that free expression and intellectual pursuit are inherent to this country's existence as a democratic society. Otherwise the style of Shakespeare, the grace of McCullers and the story of Jesus could very well be lost to the ages.

from our readers

Let officers do their job

To the editor:

I am writing this rebuttal to a column that appeared in the March 29 issue of the Observer & Eccentric, "Police quick to abuse powers" by Tim Richard.

Again the readers are subjected to the personal opinions of a frustrated, liberal journalist who uses his powers, as an editor, to tarnish the image or blacken the eye of all honest, hard-working police officers. Now, that is what I call "abuse of powers."

American police officers have traditionally been regarded as courageous protectors of the innocent. They regularly face the threat of physical harm or death.

Yet the damaging words of police brutality, complaints of improper enforcement of traffic laws, stories of illicit confessions and maltreatment of prisoners, and news accounts of police bribery, refusals to release ongoing investigative reports to the media and incompetence have altered the traditional image of our "men in blue."

Who has changed — the police or the public?

Unlike other representatives of local governments, the police officer is in view 24 hours a day.

There is no doubt, much of the criticism results from the fact that he/she has become the uniformed symbol at which a community's pent-up resentment over social conditions can be aimed.

Men and women who accept hazardous public service are no different from any other person desiring the good will and good opinion of their fellow citizens.

Consequently, it is hard for a police officer to accept danger daily, without frustration and ebbing morale, in the face of mounting public disrespect and outright hostility.

We should never forget, in our dealing with a police officer, that he/she may have just spent an eight-hour day (or more) confronting drunks, thieves, drug users, suicide and accident victims.

We cannot expect the officer to show the composure of a surgeon, the understanding of a clergyman or the learning of an appellate judge.

And, we cannot impose restrictions on our law enforcement agencies that will render them powerless to prevent crime and apprehend criminals.

I am personally distressed and appalled at the Observer & Eccentric for allowing such shoddy journalism to be printed in your fine paper. So, I implore you, managing editors and misguided sensationalism writers, to support the police; or, if nothing else, get off their backs.

"Men in blue" should be heroes, not targets.

Tim Larion,
Livonia

Detroit ungrateful for taxpayers' help

Tim Richard

TO HEAR state legislators from Detroit tell it, you'd think suburbia and the rest of Michigan are grinding the Motor City into the ground.

"We don't have an urban policy," complained an east side senator, not once but many times, as the Senate held up action on renewing Detroit's 5 percent utility tax.

In truth, Michigan does have an urban policy, or at least a Detroit policy: Give, give, give until it hurts, and when Detroit kicks you in the teeth for stinginess, give more until the pain goes away.

HOW DO WE love Detroit? Let me count the ways:

- For 19 years, Detroit was the only city allowed to collect a 5 percent tax on all utility bills.
- Detroit is the only city allowed to tax incomes at 3 percent.
- Detroit schools get a $20 million gift because of "municipal overburden." Translation: City taxes are so burdensome that the schools need extra state aid because they can't collect as much.
- Unlike Schoolcraft, Oakland and 26 other community colleges, Wayne County Community College — a district dominated by Detroit — has no property tax; voters refused it. So our urban policy calls for a $10 million "tax grant" on top of the $13 million in state aid. State legislators are nicer to WC3 than WC3 voters are.
- Detroit quit giving to the Detroit Symphony Orchestra a couple of years back. State government now kicks in $2.6 million.
- Detroit rules, but doesn't pay for, the Detroit Institute of Arts. State government pays the $16.4 million operating budget.
- The state gives $3.5 million to the Detroit Historical Museum.
- The state kicks in $4 million to the Detroit Police Department's special events division.
- Buy a ticket to a Tigers ball game and you pay Detroit a $1 tax.
- When Detroit wanted to expand Cobo Hall, the state levied a tri-county booze and hotel tax to help.
- Detroit gets $2.6 million in low-income housing aid.
- The state gives Detroit $2.5 million toward zoo operations, about a third of the operating budget.
- The Michigan Department of Transportation kicked in nearly $12 million, 90 percent federal money and 10 percent state, for the Detroit Zoo's new bird house and entrance building. It's one reason more potholes on the Lodge and Jeffries freeways aren't patched.

Why road funds for the zoo? MDOT explained: "The improvements will compensate for property given up by Detroit for construction of I-696 (Reuther) Freeway through south Oakland County. Nearly 12 acres were required for the freeway, including nearly an acre from the zoo and 10.7 acres from the adjoining city-owned Rackham Golf Course."

Thus, MDOT paid Detroit $1 million an acre!

How's that for a generous urban policy?

IT'S WEIRD how Detroit got into this mess over the utility tax.

The law provides a "sunset" or expiration date of June 30, 1988. Anyone with common sense would read it that way.

Not Attorney General Frank Kelley. He ruled that because there was no mention of the sunset date in the bill's title, the sunset section was invalid.

It's as if you were writing a cookbook with chapters on beans, potatoes and broccoli but the title mentioned only beans and potatoes. Kelley would say the broccoli chapter doesn't exist.

Wayne Circuit Judge Marvin Stempien, a sensible gent, took the common sense reading: The sunset/broccoli chapter does too exist, and the tax expired in mid-1988.

Political question: Will Kelley's fellow Democrats from Detroit retaliate against him at the Aug. 19 state convention? Or just keep bashing the "burbs"?

No vendetta — just the facts

Judith Doner Berne

NOT WRITING ABOUT IT doesn't make it go away.

We got a lot of flack recently for a story on the large number of vacancies at the Crosswinds Mall on Orchard Lake and Lone Pine roads at the north end of West Bloomfield's shopping district.

The situation isn't much different than when we write about the vacant storefronts in Birmingham or businesses moving out of Plymouth or empty offices in Livonia.

We don't have a vendetta against business or the Chamber of Commerce in our communities, as callers or letter writers are wont to say. We merely report on what's going on in a vital aspect of a community — its business district — of which we consider ourselves a part.

Do those who complain about these stories think that no one but the press has noticed those empty spaces? Or that no one else wonders what the problem is?

THE STORY on the Crosswinds Mall came about because on a recent Friday night my husband and I got a quick meal at Merlin's, its coney restaurant, then walked the mall to see what was going on.

Not much. Some malls are bustling on Friday nights — not this one. The empty corridors and the empty storefronts were hard to miss. But then, as we decided to rent a video at what used to be the main video store in town we were faced with a CLOSING sign. (Since that time the mall management has asked the store to take down the sign, since it won't be leaving right away.)

In its heyday that video store had been one of the main draws to the mall. It was hard to ignore that it is closing. So, strictly as a resident, I wondered what the problem was with the mall despite the facts that it is enclosed, has Krogers and Arbor Drug as anchors that appear to flourish and a Michigan Secretary of State office that even expanded to larger quarters.

"Any prospective customer reading this article would be persuaded to stay away from Crosswinds Mall," wrote Martin Malter, president of Malter Furs Inc., of our story.

I CAN UNDERSTAND Malter's concern. He moved to the mall from Southfield last July, and I sincerely hope his will prove to be one of the businesses that can turn this mall around.

What Malter probably doesn't know, because he wasn't around, is that this newspaper has done a number of stories on Crosswinds and its predecessors, some reporting its problems, others reporting on the remodeling and hopes for the future. One day, perhaps we can report on its success.

Perhaps this story, which Malter terms "negative and unproductive," doesn't have to be. Perhaps it can serve as a rallying point for mall tenants and the owner to do a better marketing job, find tenants with a real draw and staying power, study mall hours, reach out further to the community, utilize the West Bloomfield Chamber of Commerce . . . According to one of the partners, a promotional consultant has been hired to do just this.

As in Birmingham, Livonia and Plymouth, the articles didn't create the situation, they reported the situation. That is, after all, our job.

Science teaching gets low priority

Doc Doyle

Q: I have children in the second and fourth grades. I was a math and science major in college and work as an engineer. Science teaching at the elementary levels seems to be an after thought. Science doesn't seem to be a priority. What's the problem?

A: Probably 98 percent of elementary teachers have had only one college course in teaching science. A course called science methods.

Only 2 percent of all elementary school teachers have a major in science. Most elementary teachers took majors in reading, language arts/English or social science.

I believe the majority of elementary teachers were not turned on in their high school higher level science courses. Few if any had ambitions of becoming an engineer.

Many elementary teachers feel uncomfortable, even nervous, in setting up science experiments in their classroom. I've had elementary teachers tell me they are afraid a test tube will break in their hands or worse in the hands of one of their youngsters.

But the problem is not that simple.

Elementary teachers are generally locked into two hours of reading and a half-hour or hour of math each day. Throw in social science, health, English/language arts and time starts to become limited for subjects and choices are made.

If art, music and physical education, computer training and media (library) programs are available, it forces even more choices. Furthermore, reading, math, language arts, writing and social sciences are often times considered more important then science by not only the teachers but the curriculum director in the central office.

Compounding the issue there are no science labs or even portable labs in elementary classrooms, yet most students enjoy and learn better through related hands-on experiments.

However, there is hope on the horizon. A program called AIMS (Activities in Math and Science) had recognized the "teacher lack of confidence in the teaching of science." AIMS training deals with helping elementary teachers overcome any imagined fears in teaching science and how to set up and president science in an exciting fashion.

I see a great break through for elementary science from those teachers who have received AIMS training. You should suggest this program to the leadership in your school district.

Dr. James Doyle is a former assistant superintendent in the Troy School District. Questions for this column should be sent to Doc Doyle, c/o Observer & Eccentric Newspapers, 36251 Schoolcraft, Livonia 48150.

They reach out to troubled teens

By Julie Brown
staff writer

Teenagers charged with murder, rape or armed robbery usually grab the headlines, but they're not the only ones who have run-ins with the law.

Shoplifting, vandalism, fighting and school truancy aren't unheard of among young people in the Plymouth-Canton community and elsewhere. Some of those students go through the Youth Assistance program at Growth Works Inc.

"Our typical kid is a 14- or 15-year-old," said Sue Davis, the agency's director of community services. Nearly all come from the Plymouth-Canton community.

"Youth Assistance is a diversion program for juvenile offenders," said Davis, a certified social worker who lives in Canton. The community-based intervention program includes young people picked up by police for a first or second offense.

IN THE past, those students often didn't learn that what they'd done was wrong.

"These were kids that were kind of falling through the cracks. The message that came down was, hey, it's no big deal," she said. "Kids need to know there are consequences for behavior."

Typically, a teenager who's sent to the Wayne County Youth Home in Detroit has a lengthy record of offenses, Davis said. The Growth Works program is designed to deter criminal behavior before it gets to that point.

Being picked up for shoplifting brings many local students into the program. More boys than girls are in the program, Davis said, although girls are often picked up for shoplifting.

The program at Growth Works, a Plymouth Community United Way/United Foundation agency, began in January 1986. Students as young as 9 on through age 17 have participated.

"The people really come from all neighborhoods in the Plymouth-Canton area," Davis said. Many have well-educated parents who work in various professions.

Young people participate in the program for 16 weeks. Students learn that they're responsible for making decisions.

"I don't believe they're bad kids," she said. "I believe they made bad choices."

Some 90 students went through the program last year. Parents are also required to participate.

EACH STUDENT spends a couple hours per week in the program, and continues to attend his or her regular school during that time. At Growth Works, each student meets with an adult volunteer mentor and also participates in peer group meetings led by an adult facilitator.

"I see this as a learning experience for the kids," said Davis, who received a bachelor's degree in social work from Madonna College and a master's in counseling from Eastern Michigan University. Students learn to be responsible and to deal with adults in a more positive way.

Some young people in the program have difficulty with their studies. Some have substance abuse problems and are referred for treatment.

"They're just kids," said Davis. "They could be mine."

Those who run the program have been pleased with the cooperation of area police officials. Canton in particular has taken a stance of zero tolerance of alcohol abuse among young people, she said.

"They're writing tickets. They're not just dumping the beer out of the car anymore."

DAVIS AND others involved with Youth Assistance encourage merchants who find young people shoplifting to call the police. Some merchants are reluctant to do so.

"Kids start out with little stuff, the packs of gum." Young shoplifters generally don't get caught the first time.

"Typically, a kid will get riskier and riskier." Some begin to abuse drugs and alcohol.

Most of the young people in the program have been picked up for misdemeanors, although shoplifting may be classified as a felony depending on the merchandise's value. The offense needn't have taken place in the Plymouth-Canton community, and some young people picked up for shoplifting at Westland Center go through the program.

"This is their opportunity not to have a juvenile record."

She's found some students and parents are surprised that 17-year-olds are considered adults in the eyes of the law. Typically, 17-year-olds in the Youth Assistance program were picked up by police for committing an offense at 16, and have since had a birthday.

Agency staffers and volunteers prefer that both parents participate in the program, but will accept one

Program relies on volunteers

By Julie Brown

A number of years ago, Chris Falco saw the movie "Ordinary People."

Falco liked the way Judd Hirsch's character was able to help a teenage boy cope with his brother's death in an accident and with other family pressures.

"It got me to thinking," said Falco, a 34-year-old Canton resident. He thought about volunteering his time to help others.

He saw an item in the paper announcing that volunteers were needed for the Growth Works Youth Assistance program. Falco, who is sin-

Kids, parents can get help

Lee, a local high school student, is about one-third of the way through the Youth Assistance program.

"I was an accessory to someone who was stealing," Lee said. He was referred by the court to the Growth Works program.

"It's good," he said. "It helps a lot of people. It's nice that people can take time out to help you."

He appreciates being able to talk about problems and knowing that those discussions will remain confidential. Lee, 16, has a couple of friends who are in the Youth Assistance program.

"I wouldn't want to go down to the courts." He's grateful that he won't have a juvenile record when he completes the program.

Lee doesn't hide the fact that he's participating in the program. Sometimes, he tells friends he can't go out because he has to go to Growth Works.

THERE WAS one time when Lee thought about leaving the program. Other students in his peer group said things to him that made him angry.

"I got really mad and started yelling at them." He decided to stay with the program.

Other families have also benefited from being involved. Cyndi, the mother of a son who's not quite 15, is grateful Youth Assistance was available for her family. Her son, a local high school student, recently finished the 16-week program.

"I was having problems with him," said Cyndi, a Canton resident. Her son was angry at his family much of the time. He frequently skipped school.

"There were other problems involved in there too." She discovered her son had been drinking.

Cyndi and her husband were angry about their son's behavior and about his lying to them. She recalled hitting her son at one point.

"I was beside myself. I knew I wasn't proving anything by it."

She called Growth Works and talked to Sue Davis, the agency's director of community services. Davis encouraged her to consider having the family go through the program.

"That next day I made the appointment, he ran away." She came home from work and discovered her son was gone.

"I had no idea what to expect."

THEIR SON, who ran away with two other boys, came home that evening.

"We started in Growth Works and I've seen 1,000 percent change in my son," Cyndi said. "He's doing very well."

The couple's son wasn't referred to the program through the Wayne County Juvenile Court, although he was close to getting into trouble with the law, Cyndi said.

"His attitude has changed 100 percent. He's more responsible at home."

Their son is doing better in school and has become interested in sports.

"I think he's realized some options that he didn't have before," she said. "We just kind of take one day at a time at this point."

Cyndi and her husband also have a younger son. When their older son began to have problems, they really didn't know what to do.

"He seemed so level-headed and so reasonable." Their son had had a lot of friends, and Cyndi thought the move into high school would be a good one for him.

BOTH CYNDI and her husband went through the Growth Works program with their son. She remembers one early session when parents were discussing good things about their children. At first, Cyndi was hard-pressed to think of anything. Later, she realized her son had many good qualities.

"I think if nothing else it even gave us as parents confidence in what we were doing. There were a lot of things we were doing right, there were only a few things we were doing wrong."

The couple's son signed a "home contract," indicating among other things that he agreed to spend time with certain friends, to come home by a certain time and to do certain chores.

"It's saved us a lot of problems," Cyndi said of the contract. "That way, the child knows what's expected of him."

Gallery: site of a picture-perfect sale

By Julie Brown
staff writer

SPRING CLEANING time has arrived at the Plymouth Community Arts Council's art rental gallery.

The "Time to Clean the Gallery" sale will be 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. Wednesdays, April 25 and May 2. The art rental gallery is housed upstairs at the Dunning-Hough Library, 223 S. Main in Plymouth.

"A lot of the people have been renting pictures throughout the year and know what they like," said Therese Gall of Plymouth Township, co-chairwoman for the gallery. She's found people appreciate being able to rent art work for their homes and offices. Doing so means they don't have to spend a lot of money.

"There are a lot of paintings we've marked down quite a bit." Prices will range from under $10 to about $500. All art work will be framed, matted and ready for hanging.

"I think this year is probably the greatest variety," said Gall, who serves as co-chairwoman with Pam Mincher. The ever-popular florals will be sold, along with some abstracts and other paintings.

ART WORK in the gallery is priced for sale after one year in circulation. Some items are part of the permanent collection and aren't sold.

The gallery's collection includes nearly 300 items, and more than half of those will be for sale. Browsers may stop by the gallery Wednesdays before the sale, to see what will be available.

The sale is held each year to clear out some paintings that have been in circulation for a while, Gall said. "We want to buy new paintings for the gallery."

Money from the sale is used to buy new paintings and to support scholarships and other Plymouth Community Arts Council programs. In 1989, the gallery provided some $6,500 for the arts council from rentals, late fees and the sale. It has provided $2,500 this year.

Some 70 to 75 percent of the collection includes work done by Michigan artists, Gall said. She hasn't found that artists are offended when their work is put up for sale.

"No, because they're selling their art work. Their art work is going into somebody's personal collection."

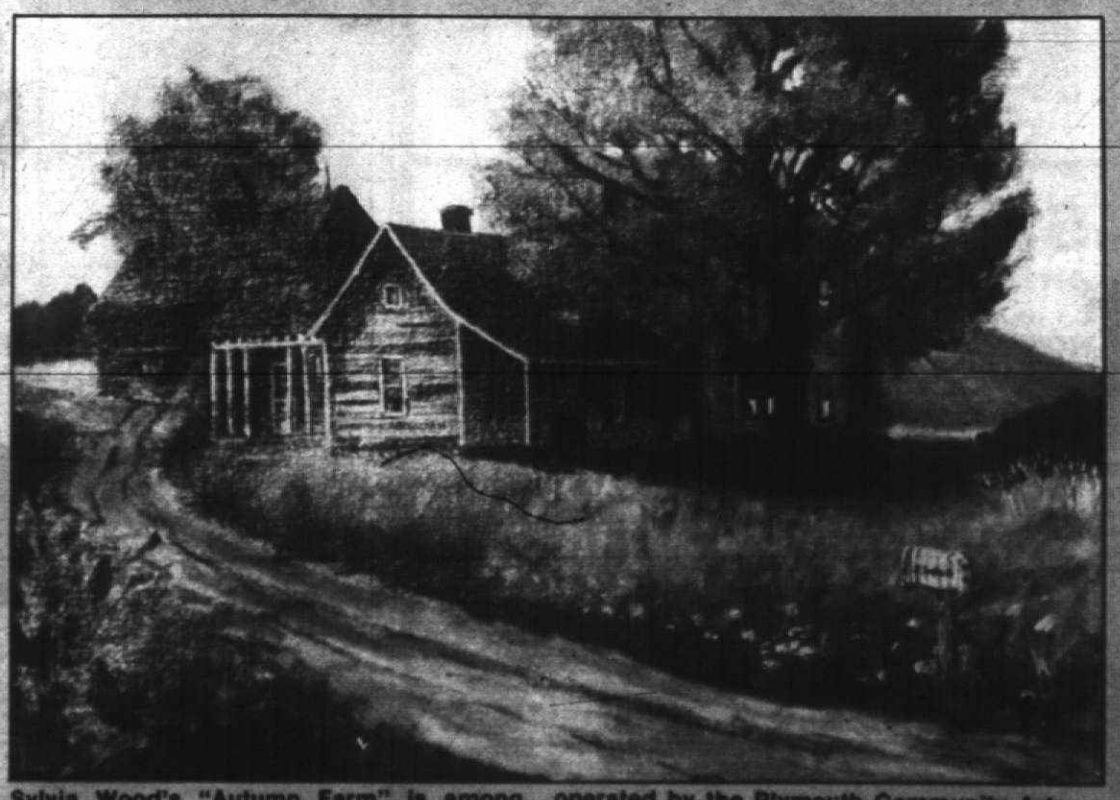
Some people rent art work that matches their furniture, drapes and carpeting, and Gall doesn't have a problem with that.

"Everybody likes what they like. Art is an individual taste."

The gallery operates 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. each Wednesday. This year's spring cleaning sale will include door prizes, two months free rental of one picture. Three drawings will be held throughout the day Wednesday, April 25, and winners needn't be present.

For more information on the art sale, call 459-0110 during gallery hours Wednesday, 459-6896 other days.

The collection at the gallery includes "Trees" by Paul Jacobs. The "Time to Clean the Gallery" sale will be held 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. Wednesdays, April 25 and May 2.



Sylvia Wood's "Autumn Farm" is among paintings to be offered for sale later this month at the gallery. The rental gallery is operated by the Plymouth Community Arts Council.

A variety of activities are planned at the Canton Public Library for National Library Week, April 22-28.

Oscar winners Sue Marx and Pam Conn will speak at 7 p.m. Tuesday, April 24, in the meeting room at the library, 1200 S. Canton Center, Canton.

Marx is a five-time Emmy winner. She and Conn, a Plymouth resident, co-produced "Young at Heart," the Oscar-winning love story about a couple who fall in love in their 80s.

The program is sponsored by the library and by the Friends of the Canton Public Library. Refreshments will be served, and reservations aren't required. For more information, call 397-0999.

National Library Week will run concurrently with National Volunteer Week, and the library's annual volunteer appreciation luncheon will be held Wednesday, April 25. At the luncheon, the Flossie Tonda Volunteer of the Year Award will be presented along with certificates of appreciation.

Library officials will also be gathering signatures for a "Library Compact," as part of a nationwide drive led by Friends of the Library groups. Compacts will be sent to Barbara Bush at the National White House Conference on Libraries in January 1991.

gle, went through training and has been working as a volunteer mentor for the past several years.

"I like doing it very much. It's really a lot of fun for me."

Falco's an engineering supervisor for the Ford Motor Co. and is responsible for the Escort/Tracer engine.

HE'S WORKING with two kids in the intervention program right now. Falco meets with them, trying to get them to step back and take a look at their lives.

"Kids are trying to break away from their parents, they're trying to assert their independence. Most of the kids that I get are really just trying to get a message across."

Young people who've been picked up for shoplifting or vandalism are often just trying to get the attention of their parents.

Parents of young people in the Growth Works program are also required to participate. Agency staffers and volunteers treat the problem as a family issue and try to get all involved to make some changes.

'Most of the kids that I get are really just trying to get a message across. Kids are trying to break away from their parents, they're trying to assert their independence.'

—Chris Falco volunteer mentor

"The kids typically are in the program for about 16 weeks." Falco has found the first few weeks can be a bit bumpy.

"The kids are all different." Some are more receptive than others.

"There are some kids that could use a scare. If they get out of line, I remind them."

Young people in the program know they could end up in Wayne County Juvenile Court and could have a juvenile record.

Falco works with another volunteer, Brenda Fischer, who went through training at the same time he did. They work with a group of about eight young people. That group meets Thursday evenings at the Growth Works office in downtown Plymouth.

THE TIME commitment required for volunteers varies. Falco meets weekly with each young person for an hour and also participates in the peer group meetings. He takes time to write reports as well.

The program's designed to help young people learn about making good choices.

"And, of course, to see them through the crisis." He's found being a good listener is essential.

"I take pride in that. I'm pretty straight with them."

Falco avoids being condescending in his dealings with the students. He points out where they might have handled a situation differently, but lets them know the choice is theirs to make.

Falco's worked with quite a few students in the program over the past several years. He hasn't stayed in touch with the young people, and doesn't know just how they're doing.

"You think about that from time to time."

Those running the program have agreed it's best for volunteers to avoid maintaining contact. The program's not designed along the lines of a Big Brothers/Big Sisters arrangement.

He plans to continue working as a volunteer mentor in the Youth Assistance program, and would encourage others to consider volunteering.

Chris Falco of Canton, a Ford Motor Co. employee, has been a volunteer mentor at Growth Works for several years. (Falco didn't create the art work in the background.)

parent's participation. Davis has found parents are often stunned when their children have run-ins with the law.

"A piece of them says 'Where did I go wrong?' A piece of them feels shame and guilt."

Young people aren't automatically referred to Youth Assistance, said Davis, who is married and has three teenage children. Factors such as prior offenses are considered. Some young people not referred through the court system enter the program as well.

Those running the program can remove students who don't cooperate, and some teenagers decline to participate. Davis then notifies juvenile court officials of that decision.

"Chances are the criminal activity has a greater chance of not changing."

Auction to feature a variety of dolls

Thirty modern dolls valued at more than $7,000 will be auctioned off 1 p.m. Sunday, April 22, at the Plymouth Cultural Center, 525 Farmer.

The auction is sponsored by International Doll Exhibitions and Auctions Ltd., an organization specializing in the sale of contemporary dolls, and by Georgia's Gift Gallery, a collectibles shop in Plymouth. Baby, celebrity, fashion, character and musical dolls will be among the lots available for bidding.

Estimated bids for individual dolls will range from $50 to $1,000. The doll expected to go for the highest price is Jason, a porcelain infant doll dressed in a powder blue clown outfit.

The doll, designed by artist Yolanda Bello, was the first issue in Yolanda's Picture-Perfect Babies collection, a series marketed by the Ashton-Drake Galleries. The limited-edition doll was originally issued in 1986 and is no longer being made.

Dolls will be on display at the Plymouth Cultural Center for inspection by bidders 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Sunday, April 22. Bidding numbers for 250 will be available on a first-come, first-served basis. Limited spectator seating will also be available.

Kudos

Achievement, efforts recognized

All the students honored at the Invitational Scholarship Ball are winners.

The annual event, sponsored by the Woman's Club of Plymouth, honors high school seniors from the Plymouth-Canton community for academic achievement and service to school, community and place of worship.

A total of 48 students were honored at this year's ball, the evening of Friday, April 6, at The Plymouth Manor. The event is supported by the Observer Newspapers of Plymouth and Canton and by The Plymouth Manor.

All of the honored students were introduced that evening. Some of the students received scholarships or merit awards.

SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS are: Rebecca Berlin, Mercy High School, $500; Beth Ann Chapman, Divine Child High School, $500; David McDonagh, Catholic Central High School, $500; Michele Young, Plymouth Canton High School, $500; David Bares, Plymouth Canton, $250; Natalie Brohl, Divine Child, $250; Shelly Eckhout, Plymouth Salem High School, $250; Jennifer McGrath, Plymouth Canton, $250.

Other honored students are: Michele Lewis, Plymouth Salem, $100 Plymouth-Canton Community Crier Merit Award; Angela Mosakowski, Plymouth Canton, $100 First of America-Plymouth Merit Award; Wendy Shiek, Plymouth Salem, $100 First of America-Plymouth Merit Award; Jeanne Steffanni, Plymouth Canton, $100 K.C. Winners of the three Remerica Hometown Realtors Scholarships are: Heidi Neuroth, Plymouth Canton, $500; Nicholas Purzer, Plymouth Canton, $250; Michael Krasko, Catholic Central, $250.

THIS IS the eighth year an Invitational Scholarship Ball took place. Many people and businesses in the Plymouth-Canton community contribute to the event, helping provide recognition and scholarship assistance for outstanding high school seniors.

The evening included a social hour, dinner, dancing and the awards presentation. Several people spoke to the honored students, parents, club members and guests.

"I'm very proud of the individuals before us tonight," said Thomas Tattan, principal of Plymouth Canton High School. "This is something that all of us in the community should be proud of."

STUDENTS FACE the challenge of living and working in a changing world, Tattan said. New technology and the information explosion of the late 20th century mean students must be able to cope with change.

"What you know you cannot lose, and no one can take that away from you," Tattan said.

It's not enough for students to have skills and knowledge, Tattan said. Students must be willing to use their talents to help others and improve their communities.

"You need to strive to become a better person, but you need to choose to do that," he said. "Self-discipline in the future is a must."

Others speaking to the group that evening were Esther Hulsing, Plymouth Township clerk and a Woman's Club of Plymouth member, and Dean Swartzwelter, president of the Plymouth-Canton Community Schools Board of Education. Plymouth Mayor Dennis Bila spoke and presented a proclamation from the city honoring the club and the students.

Contest focuses on saving environment

The Plymouth Community Arts Council is sponsoring a "Save the Earth" contest for students in the first through 12th grades.

Students in the Plymouth-Canton Community Schools will design posters with that theme. The six winning posters will be printed on 5-by-7 inch note cards made of recycled paper.

LET'S TALK BREASTS

There is no substitute for specialized expertise. For your Cosmetic Breast Enlargement, we use the peri-areolar serpentine technique. Your body's natural pigment line is used so there is hardly a visible mark from the surgery. We only use textured implants that feel soft and natural. Since they have been so successful at eliminating hardening, we often use them to replace older style implants which have become uncomfortable. Medical Director Joseph Stern, M.D. of the Cosmetic Surgery Center is Certified by three Specialty Boards and has many years of surgical experience. Dr. Stern is a world renowned teacher of cosmetic surgery procedures.

The Cosmetic Surgery Center is composed of two separate entities; the patient consultation area with full computer analysis of problem areas so that you might arrive at a more informed, realistic idea of your outcome, and a fully equipped outpatient surgical area. Here, we take care of all your needs related to Cosmetic Surgery of your Body.

If you are considering cosmetic surgery, we invite you to call for your complimentary consultation.

Clem Kern's kindness touched many

By M.B. Dillon
staff writer

"If I think Lent is to save my soul by saying more prayers, making more sacrifices, then when Easter comes, I shall not be much better, for a self-centered Lent is an ego trip and not an exercise in repentance.

"The key to Lent is to live like Jesus, for others."

Spoken by the late Father Clem Kern, pastor of Most Holy Trinity Church in Corktown, these words are related in Genevieve Casey's recently-published book, "Father Clem Kern — Conscience of Detroit."

Casey, professor emerita of library science at Wayne State University and a resident of Grosse Pointe, interviewed more than 50 people before writing the moving story of Kern's life.

For 34 years, Kern, who died in 1983 at age 75, served as pastor at Most Holy Trinity in Detroit's oldest neighborhood, ministering to rich and poor, the homeless, alcoholics, Hispanics, prisoners and denizens of Skid Row.

Local author Genevieve Casey tells the engaging life story of Monsignor Clement Kern in her book "Father Clem Kern — Conscience of Detroit."

WRITES CASEY, "Clement Kern was a simple, unassuming man who led a rather uneventful, obscure life. But when he died, 25,000 people from all walks of life attended his funeral.

"Hundreds, perhaps thousands of people considered Father Kern their very special, closest friend. Projects he started still flower in many parts of Detroit life. Many sensed in him the striking presence of Christ.

"Whether or not the Church will ever see fit officially to declare him a saint, many people revere him, not for miracles and wonders attributed to him, but precisely for his ordinary deeds."

Casey's book is an engaging account of those deeds. Kern arrived at Holy Trinity in 1943 amid a race riot, hitching a ride on a National Guard tank.

His rectory, perpetually open, soon became a haven for "Knights of the Avenue" — down-and-outers in need of a bed for the night or money for a meal, a house payment or bail.

Casey recounts that when told by a welfare bureaucrat that a family he was helping was "unworthy," Kern responded, "Send them to me at Holy Trinity, because we are all unworthy here."

Kern believed that "only accidents of genes, birth, family, faith,, body chemistry, opportunity and friends prevented his being a Skid Row vagrant himself," said Casey.

EVEN DURING his retirement years at St. John's Provincial Seminary in Plymouth Township, Kern often was seen leaving late at night in icy weather in response to a phone call from someone who had reached a crisis in life.

Kern is buried in Holy Sepulchre Cemetery in a grave beside "Curley," a "remarkably dirty, eccentric, unattractive Skid Row resident who came to be recognized as Kern's favorite 'Knight of the Avenue,' perhaps because he was indeed the least lovable," Casey writes.

Dubbed the "Labor Priest" because he worked so diligently for the union movement, Kern was a friend of Jimmy Hoffa's. He offered Mass for him when he went to prison and after he disappeared, explaining that if anyone needed prayers, Jimmy Hoffa did.

Kern conducted a funeral Mass for a friend who was an avowed atheist — newspaperman Doc Green.

The poor, whoever and wherever they were, were Kern's special love. But he had a special affinity for the Mexicans, many of whom made their way to Detroit and Holy Trinity in search of employment and a better life.

"Something in his German-American personality responded to the Mexicans — their love of family and children and music and dance, their relaxed indifference to time and their simple, unwavering faith. Affectionately, they called him, "El Padre," writes Casey.

KERN BECAME the Hispanic community's most active employment agent, finding them jobs and helping them establish businesses.

With his friend William Cahalan, Kern set up the Migrant Workers Defense League. He supported Cesar Chavez and the United Farm Workers, assisting with grape and lettuce boycotts.

Few of Kern's parishioners were black. But it was at his recommendation that the archdiocese organized the Catholic Black Caucus and the Committee on Human Relations. Kern also helped raise money for Jewish charities and spoke frequently at the Temple Beth El synagogue.

Routinely working 18-hour days, Kern strived to fill basic social needs. With the help of volunteers, he operated free legal, medical, dental and podiatry clinics at Holy Trinity.

Without bothering to notify the archdiocese, he started a parish grade school. He established a neighborhood credit union, a guild to help expectant mothers, and "Corktown College" — a night school with classes in English and other subjects for adults.

He found housing and jobs for countless numbers of men and women down on their luck.

CLEM KERN was a marvelous fund-raiser, wri.es Casey. He made it his mission to draw the entire community into the process of giving. To this day, the St. Patrick's Day "Sharin' of the Green" Mass raises thousands of dollars for Holy Trinity charities. The celebration has become "a Detroit institution which no political figure would dare to miss," says Casey.

Kern, who was named a monsignor in 1962, enlisted financial help from Detroit's labor unions and from the "Ecclesiastical Shakedown Society," a loose organization of newspapermen, bartenders and bookies. Writes Casey, "Clem Kern could always call his friends in the Shakedown Society with the message, 'The Church Militant is bankrupt,' and money would pour in."

While he loved spending time with Shakedown Society at the Anchor Bar, golfing and traveling to Latin America to study Spanish, or to Stratford to see Shakespearean plays, Kern was poorer than many of his parishioners. He depended on the charity of others for clothing, a car and gasoline.

Casey quotes Rabbi Richard Hertz, rabbi emeritus of Temple Beth El: "There was no prejudice in Clem Kern. He was a Catholic with a capital 'C' in the greatest sense of the word — universal, understanding, compassionate and religious, in the sense of religious pluralism, the right of all faiths to approach God, as each one saw fit and saw it possible to do."

Book tells story of caring priest

By M.B. Dillon
staff writer

More than 40 years ago, the paths of librarian Genevieve Casey and the Rev. Clem Kern, pastor of Most Holy Trinity Church, crossed. Kern needed books for the alcoholics, homeless and poor people he ministered to in Corktown.

"I was head of an agency at the Detroit Public Library set up to provide library services for people who couldn't or didn't use traditional library services. They were institutionalized, handicapped, or for one reason or another couldn't avail themselves," said Casey, professor emerita of "Father Kern — Conscience of Detroit."

Casey laughs when she thinks of the "St. Thomas Aquinas Reading Room" she and Kern established in a storefront off Michigan Avenue.

IN ADDITION to poetry readings and books, the facility for homeless alcoholics provided shelter from eviction and strangers' stares, as well as a place to wash clothes and listen to classical music.

"St. Thomas would turn over in his grave if he saw what we named after him," said Casey, who's written 10 books on library science and gerontology.

Casey's book, available in paperback for $11.95 at Border's, Waldenbooks and Catholic bookstores, is the first publishing venture of Marygrove College. Proceeds go to the Kern Foundation and a scholarship fund for Marygrove minority students. Since its publication in August, sales have surpassed $10,000.

HELEN MORRIS of Beverly Hills, Mich., Kern's sister, helped found the Kern Foundation, designed to continue her brother's work.

"We give money to people who need it for medicine, rent, household needs and other things," said Morris, who administers the "Fund of the Last Resort."

Morris, who critiqued Casey's manuscript, said the book "really captures my brother's life the way he lived it.

"Genevieve Casey did over 50 interviews with government leaders, judges, even down to bums on Skid Row. She interviewed all of them and really got to know him."

"MY REAL FIND was two derelicts from Skid Row," said Casey, who tracked them down to a nursing home. "I was afraid that if I found anyone who'd had contact with Father Kern, they'd be so pickled they wouldn't remember. But these two men remembered him very well."

One man, a full-blooded Cherokee whose feet had to be amputated after a winter spent sleeping outdoors, "told me that Father Kern helped him and gave him a job. He gave me a lot of helpful background," said Casey.

"I had a wonderful time writing the book. I talked to all sorts of people, all the way from union officials like Doug Fraser to Frank Angelo of the Free Press to business leaders."

Their stories take the reader from inner-city slums to Mexico and Brazil. But the theme throughout the book is unchanging. As Casey says, "Father Kern left Detroit a sweeter place to be."

"Father Clem Kern — Conscience of Detroit" also is available by writing the Marygrove College Bookstore, 8425 W. McNichols, Detroit 48221. Include $11.95 plus 4 percent sales tax and a $2.50 postage and handling charge.

moral perspectives

Rev. Robert Schaden

Challenging conscience is essential

Sister Elizabeth Walters, IHM, is serving a six month jail sentence for trespassing on government property. She crossed a white line at Wurtsmith Air Force Base during a peaceful peace demonstration.

Dear Liz,

You do not know me though I have heard of you over the past few years. Recently, I read a piece in the Detroit Free Press about you. The picture of you standing next to room EE in the Bay County Jail certainly did not look like the settings in which I remember other women of your religious community who taught me in Detroit many years ago.

Please do not take that as a criticism. On the contrary, I read the article and gazed at the picture with admiration. You see, I do have a few things in common with you. It is just that I have not crossed that line.

LIKE YOU, I too am a campus minister. Although Schoolcraft College does not have quite the numbers as Michigan State, I am sure that you would agree numbers are not the issue on college campuses. Rather, students and the people who facilitate their education are the issue.

Because of people like you, many of the rest of us are more inclined to include in that educational process the kinds of questions that need to be asked. We realize that learning is not only about how to relate to the systems of which we are a part. It is also about challenging those parts of accepted systems that in any way dehumanize even the least among us.

Despite the fact that some magistrates do not agree, many of those of us outside the jail cells have to admit that you do make us think about what really matters. We have been building nuclear weapons for so long that they seem as American as apple pie and oatmeal.

We have never seen the destruction they wrack. And we have even become used to the slow destruction they have already wracked by sucking up the monies and the ingenuity so badly needed in areas of human improvement and even human survival. It is truly frightening what we can become accustomed to and accept without question.

IT'S NOT that we are bad. We are simply about "matters of consequence" and don't stop to look. You cause us to do that, as uncomfortable as it might be. So although I cannot say that I am delighted with the challenge that you throw in our direction, I am grateful that you do it.

I had not thought of it before, but you are right, the original apostles of our religion spent time behind bars for following their consciences and challenging the collective conscience of society in the first century. We tend to forget that legacy in a world where religion is so often divorced from real-life issues and accused of butting in when it dares to address them.

It does occur to me that what made those original apostles — and many of the unnamed women in their company — great was not that they went to jail. Rather, they were great because they remained willing to name evil, even socially accepted evil, for what it was and call people to a better good and fuller vision, even when it meant jail.

God bless you for that same willingness, and for the way in which your story challenges us to bring our own story more in line with what we recite so glibly in our creeds. As so many of us prepare to commemorate high holy days, you give us pause to reflect on just what those rituals are really all about.

Respectfully,
Bob Schaden

Mountain bikers head for Sugar Loaf Resort

Cyclists will head for the hills June 9 and 10 at Sugar Loaf Resort in Leelanau, Mich. for the 1990 NORBA National Point Series and Sleeping Bear Mountain Classic.

Unlike traditional street bikes, mountain bikes have curved racing bars and all-terrain or "fat" tires which allow a cyclist to easily handle the bumpy back roads of mountainous areas.

All-terrain biking has become a popular sport in the past few years, according to reports from the National Off Road Bike Association.

Most active mountain bikers are men and women between 20 and 40 years old, with nearly half of all cyclists riding two to three times a week.

The sport has become so popular that major races are held in eight states, including Michigan. And the 1996 Summer Olympic Games will include mountain biking in the cycling events.

The Sugar Loaf Resort is one of eight national race sites and will host the June 9 and 10 Midwest regional race.

SEE AMERICA BY RAIL

Del Broquet, CTC

Americans are rediscovering the joys of traveling by rail. Our railroads are undergoing a renaissance — new track, new cars, new technology.

Rail offers safe, spacious travel with time and opportunity to watch the vista of America roll by in trains with wonderful names such as the California Zephyr, through the Rockies, the Texas Eagle from Chicago to San Antonio, the Coast Starlight along the West Coast or the Montrealer through all the major cities of the Northeast from Washington to Canada's Golden City. Special efforts have been made to accommodate elderly and handicapped passengers.

Amtrak is the nation's largest train operator, but there are many smaller, local lines that can get you from place to place. Just as with the airlines, your travel agent is tied into the automated ticketing system and can make all arrangements right at the office.

Railroads offer hundreds of exciting and affordable hotel and tour packages. Ask us about 'em at next-time trip to the archaeological digs at Snaketown, 28 miles south, and Casa Grande, 40 miles southeast.

Stopover guide to Phoenix

WHAT THEY SAY about deserts is this: If you look at them from a distance, from a plane, a mountaintop or even a moving car, it looks as if nothing is on the landscape, but the closer you get, the more there is to see.

The Valley of the Sun is like that. Take a free copy of your inflight magazine, which advertises car rental rates, and rent a car for less than $30 a day (excluding gas and taxes). Do a circle tour.

The metro area is huge, so match car rental costs against alternative transportation costs.

For example, it costs about $15 for a taxi from the airport to one of the resort hotels clustered around Camelback and Scottsdale roads in Scottsdale, $10 to $17 for an airport shuttle. The shuttle into downtown Phoenix is $5 to $7.

When you can't see everything in a day, it's best to see what you can't see anywhere else. If you start your tour among the redevelopments of downtown Phoenix, you'll see the state capitol, Heritage Square and the Heard Museum of Anthropology and Primitive Arts, which focuses on the history and prehistory of the Southwest.

IF YOU GO in the other direction, toward Tempe, the don't-miss attraction is the Desert Botanical Gardens.

Pay your $3.40 entrance fee and buy a 25-cent guidebook, and you will be amazed at what will grow in the desert. You'll be mesmerized by the 50 kinds of cactus plants that thrive and bloom there.

The average yearly daytime temperature in Phoenix is 88 degrees and about 64 degrees at night, so you'll need a cold refreshment by the time you leave the gardens. The best stop is down the road at one of the small sidewalk cafes in Tempe, home of the University of Arizona.

The interesting circular building on campus is one of the last major buildings designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. Arizona celebrates Wright through 1990, because the Valley of the Sun was his winter home. Taliesin West in north Scottsdale is where he trained his students, and where his disciples go to idolize his work.

WITH A FEW hours in the Valley of the Sun, you can shop, eat and play in Old Scottsdale, taking a horse-drawn carriage to lunch. You might even climb Phoenix South Mountain park for a spectacular view of the city.

The mountain, and several other attractions, were on my list of things to do the next time around.

For more information, contact Phoenix and the Valley of the Sun Convention and Visitors Bureau, 505 N. Second St., Suite 300, Phoenix, Ariz. 85004-3998, or call (800) 528-0483.

The second lecture, "The Treasures of Eternity," will be presented on May 2, followed by the May 9 lecture, "The Jade Mountain."

Monkey business

There has been no monkeying around at the Detroit Zoo lately. The zoo is dressing up for a new summer season opening in May with a new two-acre, $7.5 million chimp island.

The island will offer an up close look at the zoo's seven wild and four zoo-bred apes. Visitors will explore the island through a trail which leads to viewing ports across a moat to the island. The devices and techniques of the new island will bring visitors to the natural habitat for these threatened and endangered species.

Starting in May, zoo hours will be 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday thru Saturday and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sundays and holidays. Admission is $5 for adults and $2.50 for children ages 5-12.

Stay on beat with Motown and book a Hitsville, U.S.A. adventure with the Radisson Plaza Hotel in Southfield.

The Radisson at Town Center will take music lovers by round-trip shuttle service to the Motown Museum, 2648 West Grand Blvd. in Detroit.

The $99 per couple package includes a one-night stay at the Radisson on Friday, Saturday or Sunday, admission for two to the museum, a special souvenir and breakfast for two the next morning at Tango's European Bistro in the Town Center.

The history at Hitsville, U.S.A. represents the hard work and talent that made Motown musicians famous.

The Motown Records studio was started in 1959 by Berry Gordy and produced hits from stars such as Michael Jackson, the Supremes, Stevie Wonder, the Temptations, the Four Tops, Marvin Gaye, the Miracles and many others.

Today, the museum is run by Esther Edwards, Berry Gordy's sister. Once senior vice-president of Motown Records, she is now the museum director.

The Radisson is working with the museum to commemorate Detroit's pop music contributions throughout 1990, Motown's 30th anniversary.

Mi Casa Su Casa

While stopping over in Phoenix on our way to Los Angeles, we organized a one night stay in a bed and breakfast. Our B&B was an adobe house connected to a complex of adobe buildings in Scottsdale, Ariz.

We found the B&B through Mi Casa Su Casa, an organization that rates and rents more than 100 bed and breakfast accommodations throughout Arizona, New Mexico and Utah. They can arrange a home stay, guest cottage, small inn or guest ranch for you.

"Mi casa su casa" is the historic Spanish western welcome: "My house is your house."

According to the literature distributed by Mi Casa Su Casa, their accommodations "have been granted a Gold Medallion certificate as they meet the highest industry standards as set by Bed and Breakfast Worldwide, a Trade Association of Reservations Services."

Each accommodation is listed in their small directory, but I didn't know enough about the Phoenix/Scottsdale/Tempe/Mesa area to choose, so I called and talked to Ruth Young, who established the service in 1980 after her son had experienced B&B's in Europe.

RUTH WAS a cheerful voice with lots of information about how to stay within half an hour of the airport; we were leaving early the next morning and didn't want to brave the Phoenix traffic on the way to our plane.

We went back and forth over the listings. Right location? Right kind of bed? Do we mind being with a dog? Do we smoke? Finally, we chose a private home on a Phoenix street for $45.

"Now, what kind of work do you and your husband do," Ruth asked. She must have heard my hesitation, because she promptly added: "I'm not being nosy, we just like to introduce our guests to our hosts."

"My husband is a travel photographer," I said.

"Oh, well, in that case you must go to another place. It has adobe buildings set in date palms, in fact it's on the grounds of an old date farm and its very photogenic."

That raised my rent to $60, plus the $5 surcharge for staying only one night in an accommodation, but I chose it anyway.

B&B check-in is not until late afternoon, so we saw the town before we turned into the date palms, walked through the gardens and knocked on a door in the adobe complex. Our hostess Pamela Hopkins greets her guests with wine and cheese before leading them to their room.

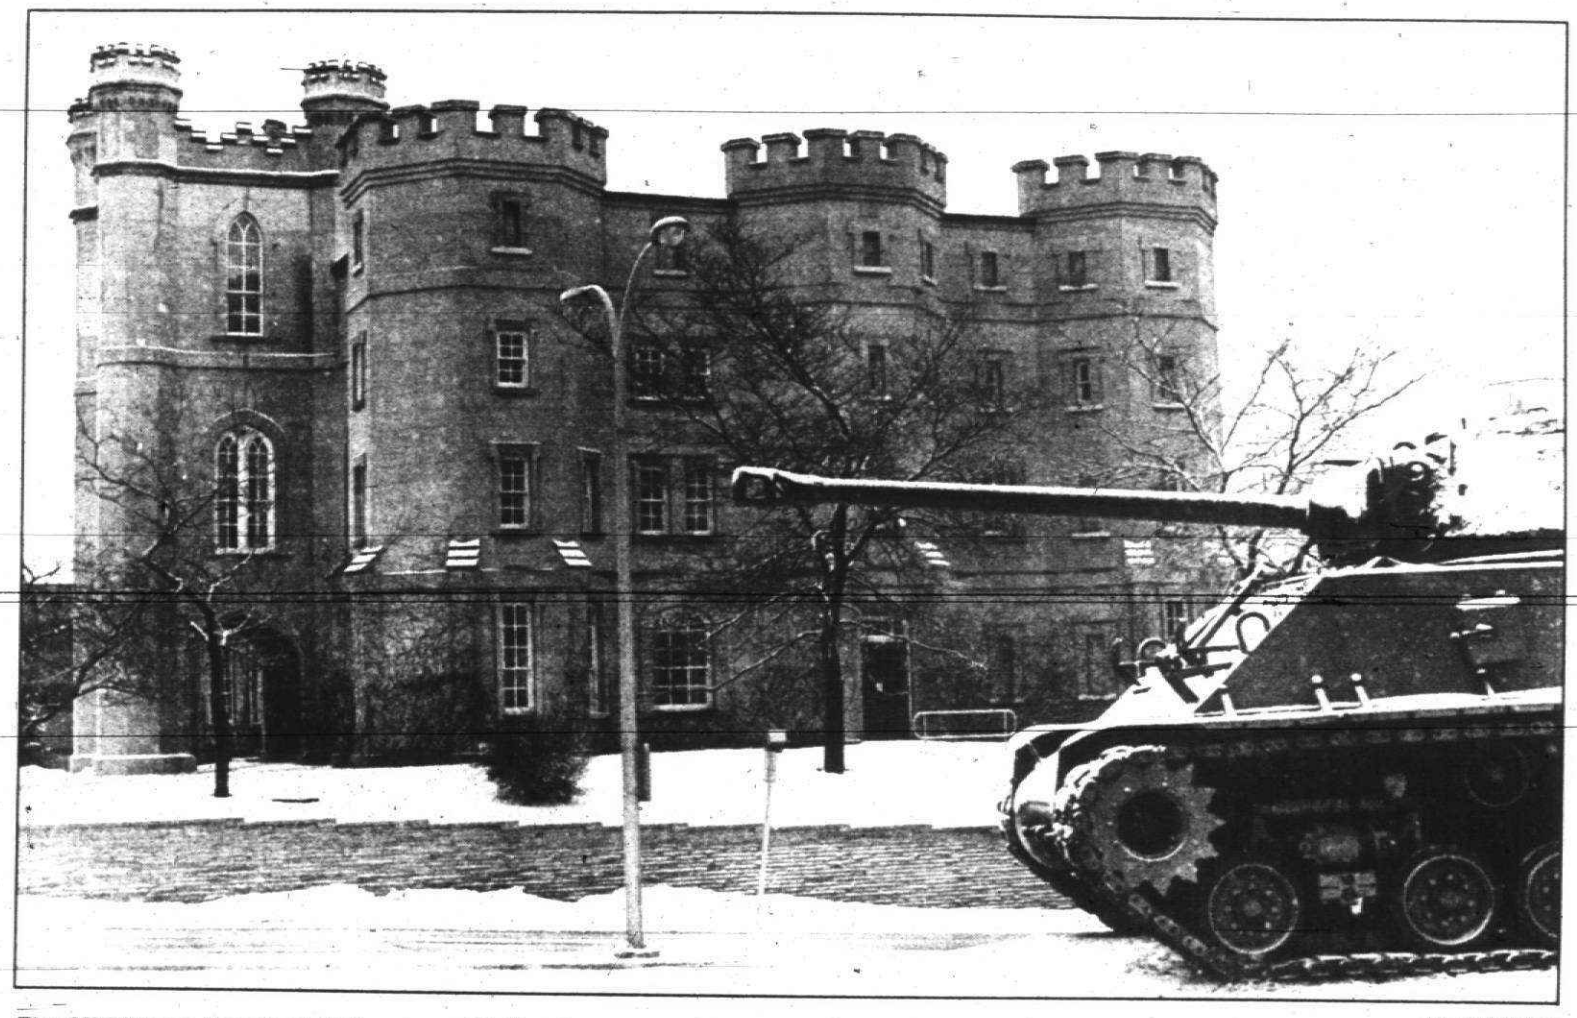
THE KING-SIZED bed was built atop a raised platform. Our private bathroom was a few feet down the hall. The hall was screened off from the living room for privacy.

We didn't have much time to enjoy Pam's hospitality but enough to get a taste of Arizona hospitality. Her house was our house. She has only the one room to rent, and her guests include both tourists and business travelers.

Mi Casa Su Casa is one of many B&B organizations in the U.S. Its directory includes more than city homes. You can go to Ajo, near the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument on the Mexican border; to the 1880's town of Bisbee; to Sedona in Arizona's Red Rock country; to Flagstaff near the Grand Canyon; to Page at Lake Powell which has 1900 miles of shoreline amid towering canyons.

Double occupancy rates range from $35 to $45 for a modest home and $65 to $125 for a luxury setting. Send $5 for a directory to Mi Casa Su Casa, P.O. Box 950, Tempe, Ariz. 85280-0950. Or call (800) 456-0682.

THE LONDON



The Middlesex County Building, a castlelike fortress, is a great view from the London Regional Art Gallery. WILLIAM SHOEN

NEXT DOOR

By Mary Rogers
special writer

We wanted to get away from it all.

We wanted to find a place that would liven up the dullness that the not-quite-winter, not-quite-spring period is famous for. So we went to London for the weekend.

"We" means three couples; two from Birmingham, one from Farmington. We did some shopping, had afternoon tea and took a pleasant walk along the Thames at twilight. We saw a play, visited an art museum and a few galleries and found several good restaurants with French accents.

You understand, of course, that I'm talking about London, Ontario.

ONE OF London's many charms is that it's so accessible; an easy, two-hour drive from the Detroit area.

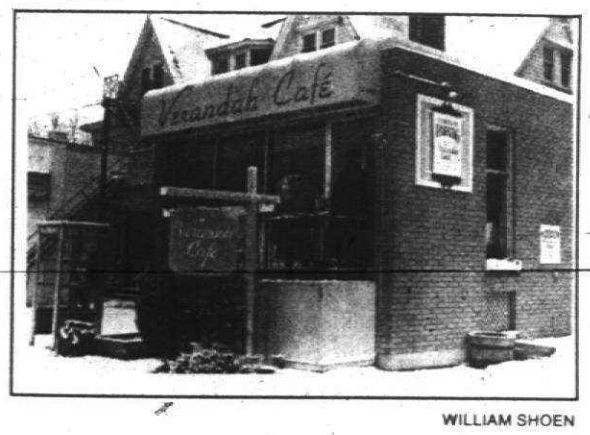
The first mile or two off Canada's 402 expressway is lined with familiar fast food outlets and motels so you may feel that you've never left home. But it's not long before the distinctive London look takes over.

London is the home of the University of Western Ontario, Labatt's Brewery, the Grand Theatre Company, a growing art community and the Guy Lombardo Museum. It's a blend of industrial business and a small town character; conservative and trendy, up-to-date and Victorian.

A good example is the Sheraton Amouries, a striking contemporary hotel incorporating a military armory of the late 1800s. There we saw a well-dressed woman, a real Queen Elizabeth look-alike, and a teenager in black tights with spiked purple hair, chatting away in the lobby.

Another charm is that London is so, well, Canadian. You know you're in another country in spite of all the similarities between Ontario towns and those in the Midwest.

LONDON IS an easy town to get around in. Most of its cold weather attractions are in or near downtown, so we left our car in the hotel garage and walked everywhere through a soft, scenic snowfall.



WILLIAM SHOEN

The Verandah Cafe is small and stylish. It fills up fast with visitors who make eating a major part of their get-away weekend.

Like many visitors, we planned our weekend around a play at the Grand Theatre; the provocative "The Road to Mecca" by the South African playwright, Athol Fugard.

Martha Henry is the Grand's artistic director. She comes from the Shakespearean Festival at nearby Stratford. The restored theater is mainly 1970s modern in style, but the ceiling still has its colorful murals and rococco touches of turn-of-the-century decor.

"Girls In The Gang," a musical, will end the theater's current season in May. Call the Grand Theatre for ticket and schedule information at (800) 961-4918.

THE LONDON Regional Art Gallery, all glass and shiny steel tubing, with an aluminum rhinocerous sculpture and a couple of army tanks guarding the grounds, has a varied program of interesting exhibitions.

On the second floor is an attractive cafe called the Gallery, with wonderful views of the Thames river and a fortress-like building across the street.

The food, provided by the Auberge du Petit Prince, a popular French restaurant, lives up to the setting. We had an ideal before-the-theater lunch; ginger carrot soup, pate and crusty bread and a flavorful green salad.

A GETAWAY weekend tends to revolve around meals, and London obliges with a variety of rewarding restaurants. Our two dinners, one at the Verandah, the other at Cafe Bruges, were delightful. Both are small, stylish places that fill up fast, so reservations are a good idea.

The Gallery Cafe in the London Regional Art Gallery, Michael's on the Thames and the Sheraton Armouries all serve a lavish Sunday brunch.

If you're in the mood for something different, there's the Laundry Cafe, 590 Oxford Street, offering 62 washers and dryers, a cafe menu, cocktails and big-screen TV.

And Mash McCann's Pub-Restaurant, 784 Dundas St., has entertainment that often includes wet T-shirt contests, Jell-O wrestling and table dancing.

IT'S FUN to browse in London shops. We found bargains in sweaters, mohair blankets and tweed caps.

Try Scott's on Dundas Street for Scottish woolens and the shops along Richmond Row, near the Grand Theatre, for trendy boutiques. The Covent Garden Market, off Market Lane, has Canadian crafts and foods.

Aside from the Sheraton Armouries hotel, there's the Idlewyld Inn, the home of a 19th century London mayor, recently restored to polished splendor, with 26 rooms, antiques and up-to-date extras, like saunas and whirlpool baths. The downtown Journey's End hotel offers comfortable rooms at economical prices.

When we left, we were already planning another weekend visit for the summer. We want to see London's lovely parks and gardens, the 1834 Eldon House and the Museum of Indian Archaelogy, and take in a London Tigers baseball game in Labatt Stadium.

And of course, there's always the Guy Lombardo Museum.

The Desert Botanical Garden in Phoenix, Ariz., is a great stop to discover the 50 kinds of cactus plants that grow throughout the Southwest.

Phoenix offers an active stopover

By Iris Sanderson Jones
contributing travel editor

How do you see Phoenix in a day when you've never been there before and you don't have a local friend as a guide?

That's the kind of problem faced regularly by business travelers with only a few hours to see their destination city before they fly home for another long week at the office.

We landed at Sky Harbor International Airport in Phoenix on Southwest Flight 500 from Detroit at 11:20 a.m. Tuesday, and flew out again on Flight 921 to Los Angeles at 9:20 a.m. Wednesday.

How can you do justice to the 10th largest metropolitan area in the United States in less than a day? You can't. But you can get a lot of travel value for your time if you land with a fistful of tourist literature and a plan.

I HAD never visited the Southwest desert country before, and I saw it for the first time from 30,000 feet in the air. It spread below the plane in a reddish haze. At first the desert looked like it was dotted with lakes, but they were black shadows from the clouds hanging in the hot sun.

A highway and a river bed snaked side by side across the desert. What looked like flat land materialized into tabletop mesas. The land began to stubble like a 5 o'clock shadow. Trees. Snow-covered mountain trees. Red stone cliffs.

Then we came down through huge, whipped cream, cumulous clouds into the Valley of the Sun.

The Valley of the Sun is a chamber of commerce phrase. It describes the huge flat desert setting surrounded by mountains. Housing suburbs and recreational vehicle parks spread to the horizon, circling the mountains that erupt out of the valley, especially Camelback Mountains, the landmark of the Phoenix area.

The Hohokam Indians never saw the valley from airplane height. But if you visit the Pueblo Grande archeological site you will get a taste of how they lived in this hostile landscape, amid a system of mile-long canals, more than 1,000 years ago.

If that ancient culture interests you, plan a

Detroit guidebook tells good and bad

AP — Almost a decade has passed since the Detroit area has had a guidebook published. Now a husband and wife team has put together a review of the city and surrounding suburbs, offering a taste of southeastern Michigan.

Don and Mary Hunt, both 45, who founded the Ann Arbor Observer monthly magazine in 1976, wrote the 341—page book, "Southeast Michigan."

The critical review touches on sites and restaurants from Flint to Monroe.

"Detroit is such a complex city. We really struggled . . . to get a balance," he said. "We found the more you know, the more interesting it is. We like Detroit," said Hunt. Hunt and his wife began work on the book after selling the Observer in 1986.

The book gives readers hints of places waiting to be discovered, but also addresses racial segregation in the suburbs, Hunt said.

They characterize Mayor Coleman Young as having "grown more isolated and arrogant with time," and note how Dearborn Mayor Michael Guido once stumbled into a controversy involving his city's Arab-American population.

Hunt said too many guidebooks are superficial. "One of the things that are off-putting are guidebooks that see sunshine everywhere. It's so unrealistic."

The book is expected to begin showing up in bookstores this week for $12.95.

Glass artisans find diversity fuels business

JERRY ZOLYNSKY/staff photographer

A flat, round piece of glass like that held by Laurel Clark, founder of Lumen-Essence, can be transformed into a serving dish through heating and manipulation.

By Doug Funke
staff writer

Laurel Clark and Susan Gossman know all about desk accessories, bookends, picture frames and candlesticks made of pieces of glass.

The business partners know about bending large pieces of glass for prototype automobiles.

But perhaps best of all, Clark and Gossman, owners of Lumen-Essence in Troy, know about surviving in the business world.

Income statements look good now as the two prepare to launch a line of glass furniture. But it wasn't that long ago, about 4½ years, that their commissioned art studio was going nowhere fast.

So Gossman, the brains behind the business operation, jumped at the opportunity when she received a call from a General Motors executive about making a windshield prototype. Keep in mind that Lumen-Essence had never done it before.

"Heck yeah. We thought we could subcontract it," Gossman said.

They couldn't.

'We've been fortunate. It's been like trying to keep our hands on bouncing ball.'

— Laurel Clark business owner

"THERE ARE other companies that do prototype automotive glass, but for them, it's a real pain in the butt," Gossman said. "It costs too much or takes too long."

But because the cash advance had been spent, some on back bills, the partners had to do it.

"We mixed our own cement in forms on the floor and built a furnace around the forms," Gossman said. "We felt it was kind of a do-or-die situation."

Necessity literally was the mother of their invention. The two learned by doing and by contacting experts in the field, experiencing much failure along the way.

GM liked the job — much to the partners' surprise — and ordered more work, prompting Clark and Gossman to move to larger quarters in Troy. Other automotive clients soon jumped on board.

Now the two are expanding again, buying a large furnace to manufacture glass furniture.

"EVERYTHING HAS taken off like crazy," said Clark, 34, the creative genius behind the operation. "We've been fortunate. It's been like trying to keep our hands on bouncing balls."

About 25 percent of the business is auto related, 35 percent gift line and the balance divided between commission work and the new furniture line, Gossman said.

The gift line, including candlesticks, plates, bookends and desk accessories, are sold wholesale to gift shops. Commission pieces, like works of art, are referred by interior designers.

All of the pieces are handmade and one of a kind.

Clark's interest in the art was fueled by a class in stained glass. Even now, she constantly experiments with new ideas.

"I like the physical end of it — producing, designing, making it and teaching others to do it," she said. "I don't draw at all. I think of them (products), then come out and try to make them. It's pretty much a hands-on kind of thing."

Gossman, 41, educated as a social worker, gravitated into medical adminstration and hooked up with Clark after taking a stained glass class herself.

EACH COMPLEMENTS the other's strengths and neither is afraid to get her hands dirty.

"Susan made the big difference," Clark said. "She brought money with her and business expertise."

"I like immortality," Gossman said. "I'm not an artist. I can come in (the studio) and watch Laurel create immortality.

"Laurel and I do most of the automotive bending ourselves," Gossman added. "We're training two guys. They do a lot of it, but they're not experienced enough yet to do it all." Both also attribute their company's success to the efforts of all 10 employees.

"We give them room to create," Gossman said.

Neither are content to rest on past successes. Going into a furniture line will reduce dependence on the auto industry.

Lumen-Essence also has exclusive distribution rights to a glass adhesive that Clark helped develop.

"We focus on different things for different reasons at different times," Clark said. "When there's nothing new going on, I'm bored. I want to go out start a bakery or start another business."

"I like the big deal," Gossman said.

If things work out as now planned, the partners will consolidate Lumen-Essence operations in larger quarters in five years.

Taxpayers: It's that time

Deadline gets closer for last-minute filers

If you're scampering to file your 1989 tax return by midnight, April 16, stop and take a deep breath.

Keep in mind that in the frantic rush to beat the clock, you may make some careless errors. Before you mail your return, the Michigan Association of CPAs advises taxpayers to review the following list of common last minute mistakes that can result in penalties.

Failing to file for an extension

Of all last-minute mistakes, perhaps the costliest is failing to file for an extension. If you are simply unprepared to file a carefully prepared and documented tax return, don't blindly rush ahead.

You can request a filing extension by submitting form 4846 by April 16. The one-page form requires you to estimate your tax liability for 1989 and pay any tax due.

By submitting the form, you push the filing deadline to Aug. 15, thus gaining an additional four months to prepare and file your tax return.

Failing to pay when filing for an extension

While the IRS allows an extension for filing completed tax forms at a later date, any tax due must be paid at the time you request an extension or you will face interest and possible penalty fees, including an 0.5 percent per month penalty on the net amount of taxes not paid by the due date.

However, the overall penalty cannot exceed 25 percent of the tax due. In addition, the IRS will charge interest on back taxes.

Failing to report a nondeductible IRA contribution

If you made a nondeductible Individual Retirement Account (IRA) contribution for 1989, be sure to also fill out form 8606 and attach it to your return. If you fail to do so, you become liable for a $50 fine.

Forgetting to supply Social Security numbers

On your tax return, you must supply your own Social Security number and the numbers of each dependent who reached age two by Dec. 31, 1989.

Some taxpayers mistakenly assume that this rule refers only to dependent children. In actuality, you must supply a Social Security number for any dependent children or adult you claim, including a spouse or parent.

If you fail to do so, you will have to pay a $50 penalty.

Miscalculating totals

Simple mathematical errors may seem relatively insignificant to you but to the IRS they are red flags pointing the way to a carelessly prepared return.

Miscalculating totals or transposing figures can draw more attention to your return than you desire. Always double-check your math before signing and mailing your tax return.

Failing to deduct state and local income tax

A good number of taxpayers have the mistaken impression that state and local income taxes are no longer deductible. In states with high tax rates, the misconception may mean losing a legitimate deduction worth thousands.

You can find out how much state and local income tax was withheld from your 1989 salary by checking your W-2 form. In addition, see if you made any payments last April for the balance of your 1988 state and local tax bill. You should also take into consideration any state estimated tax payments made during the year. Those taxes also are deductible on your 1989 return.

Deducting reimbursed expenses

If you don't want to get into trouble with the IRS, avoid deducting reimbursed expenses.

For example, Jim's annual medical expenses totaled $3,700. As he understood the tax law, these expenses were deductible to the extent that they exceeded 7.5 percent of his adjusted gross income (AGI), which was $36,000. So, on his tax return, he deducted $1,000.

What Jim failed to take into account was that his insurance company had reimbursed $3,000 of his medical costs. As a result, Jim could not deduct a single penny of his unreimbursed medical expenses.

Before you drop your tax return in the mailbox, be sure to carefully review the miscellaneous, medical and casualty-loss deductions to account for any expenses reimbursed by your employer or an insurance company.

Not taking credit when it's due

Ignorance is not bliss when it comes to tax law. If you don't know what a tax credit is, it's time to find out.

A tax credit is far better than a deduction, since it allows you to subtract a specified amount directly from the income tax you would otherwise owe.

Credits are avaiable for qualified dependent-care expenses, for the elderly or permanently and totally disabled and for low-income workers who claim one or more dependents.

If you suspect that you may be eligible for one of these credits, a quick phone call to a CPA may ultimately result in significant tax savings.

Failing to attach proper documentation

Failing to attach the necessary documents to your tax return may very well invite an IRS inquiry. Enclosed with your return should be a W-2 form, which lists your annual wages as well as the amount of taxes paid during the year.

In addition, you may have to attach to your tax return one or more forms, such as Form 8283 for deducting noncash charitable contributions of more than $500.

Mailing an unsigned tax return

Even the smallest mistakes, such as forgetting to sign your tax return, can have serious consequences.

CPAs warn taxpayers that the IRS may treat unsigned returns as if they had never been filed. As a result, you could be penalized 5 percent of the net tax due for each month the return is late, with a maximum penalty of 25 percent.

Marginal tax rate is obvious

By Sid Mittra
special writer

Most taxpayers have heard of marginal tax rate. And yet, many of are still confused about what this rate is, and how it is used in calculating a taxpayer's tax liability.

Marginal tax rate is the rate paid on the last dollar you received — not the average rate you pay.

For example, if you are in the 28-percent bracket, the first $32,450 will be taxed at a 15-percent rate. But if you receive a dollar more in income, the federal government will take 28 cents of that dollar.

The concept of the marginal tax rate is illustrated in the accompanying chart. This chart reveals the following facts regarding a married taxpayer whose taxable income this year would equal $162,770.

IF YOU have a taxable income of up to $32,450, you will be taxed at a rate of 15 percent.

If you have a taxable income of more than $32,450 but less than $78,400, your marginal rate will be 28 percent.

If you have a taxable income of more than $78,400 but less that $162,770, you will be taxed at a marginal rate of 33 percent.

Marginal Federal Tax Rates

The following chart shows the amount of taxable income for singles and for those who are married and file a joint return

Single Marginal Brackets	Taxable Income	Married Marginal Brackets	Taxes Due	Cumulative Tax Liability
Over $97,620	28%	Over $162,770
$97,620	33%	$162,770	$27,842	$45,575
$47,050	28%	$78,400	$12,866	$17,733
$0		$0	Source: Federal Tax Code

The marginal tax rate of this taxpayer is 33 percent. Note, however, that the average tax rate is only 28 percent ($45,575 in taxe: divided by $162,770 in taxable income). This is because a large portion of the income is taxed at lower than 33 percent tax rate.

Technical man leads GM into technological future

Dan McCosh

Now that it's safe to predict who is going to be the next chairman of General Motors, there are more than a few rubbing their hands together at the prospect of a "car guy" finally heading up the world's largest industrial corporation.

Actually, characterizing heir-apparent Robert Stempel as a car guy is about as misleading as typing outgoing chairman Roger Smith as a financial type. Smith used finance as an analytical tool to develop a risky theory of future strategy; Stempel has a record of shepherding complex technological programs that have changed the basic nature of the car business.

STEMPEL DOES, indeed, harbor an engineer's basic fascination with machinery. He spent roughly the first 15 years of his career working on hands-on car development projects.

Stempel cut his teeth on the Olds Toronado, the first American car to revive front-wheel drive in 30 years, a project that demanded a clean-sheet approach to become successful.

Probably more significant, however, was a special project undertaken as special assistant for the late GM President Ed Cole to develop volume production of the catalytic converter for passenger cars. In about two years, the converter and its electronic controls — which in turn meant building the largest computer factory in the world in roughly 18 months — were on GM cars.

THE CONVERTER program was an exercise in technological management that probably won't be duplicated in this century. It proved to be remarkably durable and effective, the single most important contribution any company made to clean air.

The emission project led quickly to director of engineering at Chevrolet and then to Pontiac as general manager. He was at Pontiac when that division began development work on the Fiero, at the time a radical new method of building cars, using a structural steel chassis and plastic skin.

That the Fiero was done at all was a testimony that some maverick thinking was beginning to permeate General Motors. Developing the car was one thing, getting it into the GM system was something else again.

ULTIMATELY IT took heavy reliance on outside engineering expertise, a so-called "Skunkworks" inside Pontiac with an unusual degree of freedom, and some imagination to see the demand for the car.

These elements ultimately formed much of the strategy adopted for the GM reorganization adopted by Roger Smith, including the formation of an independent Saturn Corp. and the reorganization of the engineering departments.

Curiously, however, despite the free spirits that developed it, the Fiero was seriously compromised as a car, with powertrain and suspension shortcuts and ultimately reliability problems.

SO WE see taking over not so much a "car guy" as an executive with a consumate skill as a manager of new technology. He is, as far as I know, the only GM chairman with a Ph.D. (an honorary doctorate from Worcester Polytechnic Institute awarded for outstanding technical contributions).

We also see the emergence on top of the managers who were largely responsible for the GM cars on the road today. Car guys, to be sure, but now they are car guys with no place else to point the finger when things go wrong.

"A Greenview Lawn Is A Showcase Lawn"

All 7 steps help small business managers succeed

Mary DiPaolo

"Brainstorming" is the fourth step of the problem-solving process developed by the California-based consulting firm of Herb Mitchell Associates.

During this step, business owners and managers are asked to keep an open mind while brainstorming various solutions to their problem.

"Crazy" ideas may actually serve to trigger a fresh approach to the problem that hasn't been considered before, Mitchell said.

The objective is to form as many tentative solutions as possible.

The more possible solutions you form, the more likely you are to include the best solution rather than just a workable one.

NEXT, ONE must take a hard look at all of the tentative solutions developed in step four and test them for reliability.

Objectivity is an important key to the success of this phase.

Business owners will have a strong temptation to pick out the solution they secretly favored all along — or the one that seems the easiest, quickest or least expensive to implement.

This is a serious mistake. To ensure objectivity while testing various solutions, measure each against a common yardstick.

That yardstick should be the company goals and objectives that have been established to identify the firm's future direction. The best solution is one that is in harmony with the organization's goal.

STEP SIX is to select the best solution alternative. This is the step where management earns its salary.

On the basis of the problem-solving steps already completed, the best possible solution must be selected.

Without being overly hasty or hesitant, the evidence should uncover one solution that makes most sense, matches company goals and objectives and needs to be acted upon.

In very few situations will one alternative stand out above all the rest.

More often, no one potential answer is perfectly clear, but may take the form of a combination of two or more alternatives discovered in step four.

If the evaluation of tentative solutions reveals that none of the alternatives is reliable or workable, management must repeat the entire process from step one. In all probability, the problem has most likely been properly identified.

LAST, THE solution selected must be put into action. Even the best resolution is useless if it goes no further than printed words on paper.

If the problem is corrected after a solution has been acted upon, the "right" answer has been discovered to the right problem. If not, the solution may need to be modified.

Once again, the seven-step process for solving business problems is as follows:

- Identify the real problem.
- Write it down.
- Gather information.
- List possible solutions.
- Test possible solutions.
- Select the best alternative.
- Put your solution into action.

Following these auto care tips should help the environment

As Americans become more and more aware of the need to respect the environment, they are constantly looking for ways in which they can make a difference.

But one obvious place they may not have looked may be right in their driveway or garage.

Doing the little things on the family car can have a big effect on improving the environment, said John King, parts and service engineering manager for Ford Parts and Service Division.

"It's amazing how much we can do to make our cars friendly to the environment. On a very large scale, the company and our dealers are taking steps to reduce harmful tailpipe emissions and to recycle and eventually eliminate CFCs in order to protect the ozone layer.

'It's amazing how much we can do to make our cars friendly to the environment.'

— John King
Ford Parts and Service

"But there are steps each of us can take individually that, while certainly on a smaller scale, can have an impact."

If people properly maintain their cars and don't tamper with the emissions control system, tailpipe emissions could be reduced by 25 percent, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

King suggests the following steps be observed to assure that every car on the road is environmentally friendly:

- Follow the manufacturer's recommendations for scheduled maintenance including oil and filter change intervals. Fresh oil reduces vehicle pollution and contributes to improved fuel economy. Using high-quality oils reduces engine sludging and improve fuel economy. Air filter replacement promotes fuel economy. Spark plug replacement maximizes engine efficiency. Proper tire inflation improves fuel economy and maximizes tire life.
- Drive in a responsible manner in order to avoid excess gasoline consumption, avoiding "jack rabbit" starts, prolonged periods of idling and speeds in excess of posted levels.
- For the do-it-yourselfer, dispose of used oil and other vehicle fluids (coolant, transmission and brake fluid) through recycling centers.
- Combine trips to save both time and money.
- When the air-conditioning system requires service, make sure to take the car to a service facility that uses refrigerant recycling equipment to minimize release of CFCs to the environment.
- Use gasoline with detergent additives designed to keep fuel injectors clean. Companies that add detergents usually advertise this fact.
- If the owner's guide recommends 5W30 motor oil for the engine and climate, use it on a regular basis. It can provide a small fuel economy benefit over 10W40 and 20W40 motor oils.
- Have fluid leaks — power steering, cooling oil, brake or transmission — repaired immediately to prevent unwanted release to the environment.
- Keep all vehicle fluids at recommended levels for efficient operation.
- Use the air-conditioning system only as required — it can decrease fuel economy up to 1.5 miles per gallon.
- Don't tamper with the emission control system.

"These recommendations may seem insignificant, but taken together they can make a difference. The auto industry has made a greater contribution toward cleaning up the air than any other industry, and if more consumers can join this battle, even greater successes can be obtained."

Compared with cars built in the early 1970s, today's new cars emit 96 percent fewer hydrocarbons, 96 percent less carbon monoxide and 76 percent fewer nitrogen oxides. Pre-1983 vehicles, while accounting for 43 percent of the miles traveled in the United States, produce about 84 percent of the pollution, King said.

Meadowlarks easy to spot even when flying at 55 mph nature

Timothy Nowicki

A familiarity with the natural world allows one to predict upcoming events with reasonable accuracy. Discounting the predictable change of season, within each season there is a sequence of events that occur.

Arrival of red-winged blackbirds to cattails along the edge of roadways and other marshy areas is expected on the first warm days in March. It warms the heart to see a friend who has been away for several months return to his summer home.

First encounters of spring arrivals is always an enjoyable experience because it foretells that the consistency and stability of nature prevails.

MEADOWLARKS are also one of those early spring arrivals. They can often be seen flying along the sides of expressways or in the median separating the roadways.

Even when one is traveling at 55 mph, it is easy to identify a meadowlark. One has to be alert for traffic, but if a light brown-backed bird with shallow wingbeats and white outer tail feathers flies by, it is going to be a meadowlark.

Meadowlarks are about the size of a robin. Their backs are light brown, and their underparts are bright yellow interrupted by a black necklace. As their name implies, they are typically found in open grassy areas.

They arrive from their southern wintering grounds about the same time as their other blackbird relatives. Though they are not mostly black like many other blackbirds, several body structures, such as the bill, have caused scientists to group them together. Northern orioles that will be returning soon also are closely related to grackles, cowbirds and red-wings.

These birds frequently perch on fence poles. They will often stand very erect while extending their head upward and singing to proclaim their territory. A word phrase that simulates the phrasing of the song is "Spring of the Year."

If you get a chance to watch any "Gunsmoke" reruns, listen for the song of the western meadowlark as they ride across the plains. If you cannot, at least take note of the meadowlarks as you drive along the expressways.

Tim Nowick is a naturalist at Independence Oaks County Park in Oakland County. He lives in Livonia.

Self-avowed revolutionaries fined in distribution

By Susan Buck
staff writer

Three self-avowed revolutionary communists pleaded guilty to misdemeanor trespassing charges stemming from distribution of party leaflets at Farmington High five days before a local peace march for racial harmony in October.

Detroiters Audrey Ann Davis, 32, a postal employee, Oren Darrell Jackson, 38, listed as unemployed, and Shawn Bernard Stewart, 18, a supermarket employee, pleaded guilty March 20 and waived their right to raise First Amendment issues.

District Judge Margaret Schaeffer of Farmington fined each $25 and placed them on probation for nine months.

Davis, Jackson and Stewart are members of the revolutionary communist Progressive Labor Party's Detroit branch of the International Committee Against Racism (InCAR). The New York-based group has 29 offices, including locations in the Netherlands and Great Britain.

The controversial group believes in militant, mass action with violence, if necessary, to further anti-racist and anti-imperialist views.

In October, InCAR planned to counterprotest the neo-Nazi S.S. Action Group. The neo-Nazis canceled their protest of Farmington resident Derwin Success' peace march for racial harmony two days before the event when they learned InCAR would appear.

INCAR CONSIDERS itself to be "at war" with white supremacist groups and has physically fought them in the Detroit area, said InCAR chairman Larry Goldbetter, Detroit correspondent for the party's weekly newspaper, "Challenge-Desafio."

"We're proud of what we did as far as spreading anti-racist ideas," Davis said, after the pre-trial hearing March 20.

"Unfortunately, anti-racist views are not necessarily looked at as a good thing, so we're looked at as bad guys quite often. We're happy that the Nazis and skinheads weren't able to march. A lot of neighborhood people came out. We need to have more confidence in people — that they want to be against racism and fascists."

Davis is a 20-year InCAR member. "We've been involved in literally dozens of anti-Klan, anti-Nazi demonstrations," she said.

Stewart enters the armed services this month.

"I've never been in trouble with the law except for now," he said. "I'm a good, law-abiding citizen and I love fighting back against racism. I feel that what I did was right and I would do it again if I had a chance, but not in nine months. I'm going to learn some discipline and come back and take care of society."

ANOTHER INCAR member, Detroiter Eva Ridgell, 29, received 11 days' jail time in October after she was arrested during the peace march on disorderly conduct charges and providing false identification to a police officer. The latter charge was later dismissed. At the time of her arrest, police said that she was using up to 16 aliases and had three outstanding misdemeanor warrants from Detroit, Highland Park and Flint.

But Ridgell's Ypsilanti-based attorney, Douglas Spicer, called those offenses "trumped up charges" and "harassment."

Frank Lauhoff, Farmington Department of Public Safety director, said the setting of fines is up to the judge. "I guess the judge took a look and thought it served the purpose," Lauhoff said. "We almost had a riot out there that day."

But Goldbetter said his group did Farmington a favor. "We upheld the good name of Farmington," he said. "You had anti-racists in the news instead of racists."

Farmington attorney Steven Sonenberg, a five-year Farmington Hills resident employed for the law firm of Fried, Saperstein, De Vine & Kohn in Southfield, said he never represented InCAR members previously nor did he interest in the case stem from the notoriety of the Farmington peace march.

"I got a call that these people needed an attorney," Sonenberg said. "These (three) people have never been in trouble before."

Group has checkered history in area

By Susan Buck
staff writer

InCAR has had a checkered past in metro Detroit.

Audrey Davis, 32, a Detroit postal worker, was one of six demonstrators who in August 1981 were removed in handcuffs from Detroit Mayor Coleman Young's 11th floor office in the City-County Building.

She was charged with disorderly conduct and interfering with a police officer. Disposition of the charges is not known.

According to news reports filed at that time, the demonstrators entered a hallway in the mayor's suite by pushing through a normally locked door while somebody else was leaving. The mayor was not in the office.

While the InCAR members were led away, they chanted, "Mayor Young, you can't hide, we'll charge you with genocide."

As it did in Farmington in October, the InCAR group protested the neo-Nazi S.S. Action Group's planned "White Pride Rally" in Detroit.

InCAR, which believes in militant mass action with violence, if necessary, prides itself in physically smashing neo-Nazi and Klan rallies. It cites its efforts as a type of retributiod for past violent racial acts by white supremacists.

THE GROUP also puts much effort into supporting striking workers. According to Larry Goldbetter, InCAR chairman and Detroit correspondent for its national weekly newspaper, "Challenge-Desafio," InCAR members from Detroit regularly assisted the striking coal miners of West Virginia with money, food and supplies during the past year.

InCAR is also seeking to befriend striking Greyhound bus drivers as well as workers from the Detroit-Wayne County Union of the Homeless.

Detroit high school students are recruited for InCAR's youth movement.

In the 1981 demonstration in Mayor Young's office, Davis was joined by William Gilbreth and Clinton Smith.

The two men gained notoriety in 1973 when they led a two-day wildcat strike of the now-defunct Chrysler Corp. Mack stamping plant. Some 5,000 workers at the plant were idled while the two men and a small band of supporters occupied the plant to protest Gilbreth's earlier discharge. They presented a laundry list of complaints about health and safety conditions inside the plant.

U.S. District Court Judge Fred Kaess later issued a preliminary injunction prohibiting the group of labor dissidents from initiating work stoppages at auto plants, which became a regular occurrence at the time.

In March 1974, Recorders Court Judge Justin Ravitz of Detroit acquitted the two men of charges that they assaulted two plant security guards with a metal pipe.

Gilbreth and Smith were members of the Workers Action Movement (WAM), organized by the Progressive Labor Party, which took over Students for a Democratic Society in 1969. WAM was disbanded by 1975.

According to Goldbetter, Gilbreth, 42, took part in InCAR's Farmington demonstration and Smith, 43, remains friendly with the party.

Facts of Law
by Mark M. Bello
Law Offices of Bello & Kaufman P.C.

"The law is the last result of human wisdom acting upon human experience for the benefit of the public."
—Samuel Johnson, British author

A law written in such terms that a person of ordinary intelligence must guess at its meaning is considered vague, and therefore unenforceable.

When a divorced woman remarries, her new husband assumes the legal obligation to support her.

FACILITATION is the criminal offense committed by the person who assists the perpetrator of the crime in obtaining the means and ability to commit the act.

In early common law, a copyright was a right held forever or until the owner voluntarily sold the right himself. Today, in the United States, a copyright lasts the lifetime of the author, plus 50 years.

The next time everyday pressures build up to the point where you feel like lashing out—STOP! And try any of these simple alternatives.

You'll feel better . . . and so will your child.

2. Close your eyes and imagine you're hearing what your child is about to hear.

4. Put your child in a time-out chair. (Remember the rule: one time-out minute for each year of age.)

Harris jumps her best to win relays crown

Plymouth Salem's Jennifer Harris had the best individual meet and Farmington Hills Mercy the best team performance Saturday at the Spartan Relays.

Harris won the high jump and was fifth in the 55-meter hurdles, and the Marlins captured fifth place in the team standings.

Harris had a personal best of 5 feet, 4 inches to win the high jump and lead the Rocks to a ninth-place finish.

Competing last winter for the Spitfires, an indoor track club started by Salem cross country coach Mike Krafchak, enabled Harris to have a fast start in the spring season, she said.

"My goal is 5-6 this year," she said. "I'm more happy than surprised. I'm pretty well conditioned.

"WE WORKED a lot on technique (in the indoor season). Kraf had a lot to do with building up my leg strength. We lifted weights a lot during the off season, too."

Mercy scored well despite missing a handful of top athletes who were taking the ACT exam.

The Marlins were supposed to compete in the Oxford Relays, but that meet was canceled and Mercy was able to enter the Spartan Relays at the last minute.

Mercy coach Gary Servais praised Lauren Hood, who was third in the 800 run (2:24.7), helped the Marlins take third in the sprint medley, had a personal best of 4-8 in the high jump and anchored the 1600 relay that was eighth.

"She had a pretty incredible day," Servais said. "A lot of people are where they were last year at the end of the outdoor season."

Hood teamed with Dawn DiPonio, Kim Cook and Nicole Pryor in the sprint medley, and the distance medley team of Judi Rosowski, Stephanie Miller, Brooke Mansour and Heather Noll took third place with a 14:30 time. Noll also was fourth in the 1600 run with a 5:39.7 time.

HOOD WAS eighth in the high jump as was Brigitte Dery in the 3200 and the foursome of Heather Sullivan, DiPonio, Pryor and Hood in the 1600 relay.

Salem's Harris ran the hurdles in 9.1, and teammate Tammy Hickey took fifth in the 3200 run with a 12:04.3 time. Harris also was on the shuttle hurdle relay team that took sixth place, with Cyndi Platter, Theresa Giacherio and Sue Vig rounding out the unit.

In non-scoring roles, Salem's 800 relay team of Kim Ploucha, Yolanda Jackson, Allison Fyke and Tracy Livermore was eighth (1:58.58), and a pair of ninth places came from Chris Simpson in the shot put (30-9) and the sprint medley team of Tonya Wheeler, Ploucha, Jackson and Livermore (3:12.17). Livermore also was 10th in the long jump (14-¾).

Salem's dual meet with Brighton was terminated after the 3200 relay Tuesday with the Rocks ahead 23-13.

Harris won the high jump (4-8) and Dana Driscoll the long jump (13-9). Second places came from Jackson in the high jump (4-4), Ploucha in the Jenny Harris of Salem was the girls high jump champion Saturday at the Spartan Relays in East Lansing. She won the event with a personal-best jump of 5 feet, 4 inches. Harris also placed in the 55-meter hurdles.

Canton boys close 2nd in tri-meet

Plymouth Canton won seven events but came up short in the team score Monday, finishing second to host Livonia Stevenson in a boys triangular track meet.

The Spartans, who also had seven first places, posted 77 team points, Canton 73 and Redford Bishop Borgess 25.

The Chiefs had four winners in open running events, and they were first in two relays.

Josh Walaskay ran the 200-meter dash in 24.1 and Ron Staples the 400 run in 53.9. In the longer distances, Brian Beach did the 1600 in 4:49.3 and Matt Boland the 3200 in 10:32.9.

Staples and Walaskay also figured in Canton's relay victories. Jeremy Rheault, Craig Piwko, Staples and Jeff Pryslak won the 800 in 1:36.9, and Staples anchored the 1600 unit that included Walaskay, Dave Washenko and Brett Kearney and had a 3:39.8 time.

Mike DeJarnett had Canton's other first place, winning the high jump with a leap of 6 feet.

THE CHIEFS had plenty of seconds, too. Those included Dean Benedict in the discus (105-5), Rheault in the long jump (19-1), Pryslak in the high hurdles (17.1) and the low hurdles (45.2), Walaskay in the 100 dash (11.9), Washenko in the 400 run (54.3), Ream in the 800 run (2:10.9) and Beach in the 3200 run (10:33).

In addition, the 3200 relay team of Boland, Chris Nelson, Jason Napolitano and Ream took second place in 8:55.9. Piwko was third in the 200 dash (24.7).

Karl Wukie and Phil Greenshields had a pair of fourth places. Wukie reached 18-8 in the long jump and ran 24.8 in the 200 dash, and Greenshields scored in the 1600 run (5:04) and the 3200 run (11:25).

Other fourths came from Max Corona in the discus (86-5), Benedict in the shot put (36-11), Dennis Monticelli in the high hurdles (18.2), Gary Lewandowski in the low hurdles (45.9) and Nelson in the 800 run (2:16).

Boland, Rheault and Staples have been chosen tri-captains of the Canton team for the 1990 season.

Stevenson had three winners in the field events: John Piasentin in the shot put, Matt Heinz in the discus and Adam Samulski in the pole vault (11-0).

Andrea Welling delivers a pitch for Salem. Stevenson had only five hits, but it was enough to give the Spartans a 4-1 win.

Chiefs open with 3 wins in softball

Freshman pitcher Kelly Holmes already has proved to be the varsity softball player Plymouth Canton coach Dave Racer thought she would be.

The Chiefs are 3-0 and all three victories have gone to Holmes, who hurled a no-hitter Monday as Canton swept a double-header from visiting Livonia Churchill, 11-1 and 2-1.

Holmes struck out 11 and walked three in the process. Jenny Sekovich had two of Canton's six hits, two RBI and three runs. Jennifer Vanootighem stole two more bases to make her 9-for-9 early in the season.

The Chiefs won the second game of the Western Lakes Activities Association twinbill with Holmes tossing a one-hitter in the five-inning game. She recorded eight strikeouts and one walk.

Dawn Connor had the game-winning hit in the bottom of the fifth, and Chris Ford, Julie Nicastri and Ester Buzuvis had the team's other hits. Vanootighem had two stolen bases.

Canton defeated Ypsilanti in a non-league game Saturday in which Holmes struck out 12 while giving up six hits and five walks in seven innings.

Vanootighem had three hits, five stolen bases and one RBI, and Sekovich also was 3-for-4 with one RBI. Buzuvis scored two runs.

LIVONIA STEVENSON took a 4-1 victory Monday from Plymouth Salem, which started 0-1 in the Lakes Division and fell to 0-4 overall.

Kelly Cotter was the winning pitcher, tossing a three-hitter, fanning nine and walking six over seven innings. Andrea Welling was the loser, allowing five hits and throwing a complete game.

Carrie Palmisano had two doubles and Cotter one RBI for the winners, 1-0. Emily Giuliani had an RBI double for Salem.

The Rocks were 0-3 in tournament play Saturday at Allen Park. Salem made 10 errors in losing 18-0 to the host team, Dearborn Edsel Ford escaped with a 5-3 victory and Riverview Gabriel Richard defeated the Rocks 14-1.

Rocks make hit on Opening Day

baseball

Plymouth Salem let its bats do the talking Monday, pounding 11 hits in support of pitcher Rob Kowalski and whipping visiting Livonia Stevenson 11-3.

Junior pinch-hitter Scott Bright hit the first varsity pitch thrown to him for a three-run homer in the sixth inning when the Rocks scored four runs to boost their lead to 11-2.

Salem's Dave Makowiec started the game with a solo homer, and Tracy Ewald was 3-for-3, starting rallies in the five-run fourth inning and the fifth.

Brian Rudolph had two hits, including a two-run single. Scott Niemiec was 2-for-3 and Steve Mantay also had a two-run single.

Kowalski, who drew the starting assignment on Opening Day, worked five innings and threw 80 pitches. Kowalski, who gave up five hits, struck out eight and walked two.

"Robbie was throwing into a 30-mile-per-hour wind," Salem coach John Gravlin said. "He wasn't as sharp as he could have been, but I'll take eight strikeouts any time."

Eric Nielson pitched the last two innings for Salem, holding the Spartans to two hits. Stevenson starter Sean Hinkel suffered the loss, yielding five runs, five hits and three walks in 3⅓ innings.

John Keblaitis hit a solo homer and Bo Diamond had two hits for the Spartans.

CANTON 17, CHURCHILL 10: Plymouth Canton (2-0) managed to break a 10-10 tie in the fourth inning Monday and defeat host Livonia Churchill (0-2).

Scott Kennedy pitched 4⅓ innings in relief and got the victory, holding the Chargers scoreless, giving up one hit and striking out seven.

John Anthony started and went 2⅔ innings, giving up 10 runs, six of which were earned.

Chris Robinson paced the Chiefs with four hits, three RBI and four runs scored. Geoff Allen chipped in three hits, scored four runs and had two RBI.

Jason Dembny and Ron Groh had two hits apiece, and Dave Makara added a two-run single. Dembny scored three runs and knocked in two, and Groh, who broke the tie in the fifth inning with a single, scored twice and had two RBI.

Mike Thomas suffered the loss for the Chargers, leaving the game after the third inning.

Bill Morris, Bob Meister and John Foley each collected two hits in a losing cause.

Kennedy pitched a one-hitter over four innings Saturday to earn the victory in Canton's 8-4 victory over visiting Westland John Glenn (0-2).

He struck out seven and walked four. Anthony and Allen pitched two innings of relief each. Mark Johnston started for Glenn, lasted four innings and took the loss.

Robinson was 2-for-3 and drove in one run for the Chiefs, who took advantage of Glenn's many errors. Eric Stover had an RBI single for the Rockets.

Chiefs, Salem have fast starts

Centennial Educational Park girls soccer coaches Don Smith and Ken Johnson like what they've seen from their teams in their first two games.

Smith's Canton ballclub is 2-0, routing Adrian 9-0 in the non-league season opener Saturday and edging Livonia Franklin 2-1 in Western Lakes Activities Association play Monday.

Johnson's Salem team is ranked No. 5 in the first statewide poll with a 1-0-1 record. After a lopsided victory over Farmington Hills Harrison last Friday, the Rocks tied defending Class A champion Troy Athens 0-0 Saturday.

"The first-year girls had a taste of what it's all about Saturday," Johnson said. "They learned a lot about the speed of the game and what is required."

The No. 9-rated Chiefs, the defending WLAA champions, came from behind to defeat Franklin in the Western Division contest.

Canton's Christina Reilly tied the score before halftime, and All-American Jenny Russell produced the game winner 18 minutes into the second half.

LEAH HUTKO and Amy Tortora assisted on the goals, and freshman goalkeeper Jori Welchans got her second victory and first shutout. Canton outshot the Patriots 11-2 in the second half and 25-12 for the game.

"It was a good test for us, to see what we've got," Smith said. "The girls scrapped back and outplayed them the second half. I think (Franklin) got tired. They didn't seem to use as many players as we did."

The Chiefs got two goals from Russell and freshman Colleen Connell in the Adrian game.

Lynne Nichols and Ayana Nash had a goal and one assist apiece, and Hutko, Erin Morgan and Jenny Davis also scored single goals. Laurie McNamara assisted on two goals, Reilly and Denise Koontz one each.

Johnson was impressed by his team's collective effort in preventing No. 4 Athens from scoring.

"The starting defense was terrific for us, with (sophomore all-stater Jenny) Emmett in goal," Johnson said. Emmett and Kristi McGough, another sophomore netminder with all-state credentials, battled to a standoff with Emmett making some great saves, according to Johnson.

DEFENDERS JENNIFER Marshall, Tracy Shough, Lisa Ferguson and Gwen Gibbish came in for praise from Johnson, too.

"Athens had a couple forwards who did a lot of switching," he said, "so we had Marshall mark (all-stater Lisa) Grace all the time. They were working together really well."

Livonia Churchill is ranked No. 1 in the state, Northville second, Farmington third, Farmington Hills Mercy sixth, Birmingham Marian seventh, Troy eighth and Livonia Stevenson 10th.

Top-rated Churchill tips Falcons

Losers miss Maier

By Ray Setlock
staff writer

Farmington team played without All-State forward Carrie Maier, and it was evident the Falcons missed her presence as they fell 2-1 to visiting Livonia Churchill in a key girls soccer match.

Maier, a three-time All-Observer selection, is presently on a 10-day European tour with the Midwest Olympic Development team.

Farmington coach Cathy Cole said the team could have used Maier's services, but it has to come together and overcome the loss.

"Soccer is a team sport," she said. "But having Carrie in our lineup against Churchill would have definitely helped our chances."

Churchill, which improves its record to 2-0-1, got on the scoreboard first as senior Nikki Johnson scored early in the game, giving the Chargers a 1-0 halftime advantage.

"IT WAS nice to see us score first," Churchill coach Nick O'Shea said. "We knew that we would have our hands full with Farmington, and it was good to see us rise to the challenge."

Sophomore Dana Pososki's goal early in the second half boosted the Churchill lead to 2-0.

"Bobi Nikki and Dana worked hard for us today," O'Shea said. "They gave Farmington a lot of tough pressure. Even after we had the two-goal lead they kept attacking the Farmington defense."

The Falcons (1-1) closed the margin to 2-1 when junior forward Monika Kurzer booted the ball past Churchill goalie Dana Keller midway through the second half.

"I didn't think that the Farmington goal was a good one to allow on our part," O'Shea said. "The last thing we wanted to do was allow them to get back into the game."

Despite numerous opportunities, the Falcons couldn't muster another goal and surrendered to the Chargers.

"FRAN PRIEBE did a nice job for us," O'Shea said. "She shut down Amy Trunk today. In fact, Farmington moved Trunk to another position to avoid Fran. That is to Fran's credit."

Cole says her team could have maybe done more to score another goal and tie the score.

"Churchill has a good team," Cole said. "We could have maybe put more pressure on them at the end and tried to score another goal, but we didn't and therefore lost."

O'Shea says he was pleased with his team's performance, but they can't allow themselves to get too confident.

"I think we know were a good team," said the Churchill coach. "We had a good year last season and lost just a couple of girls. But if we let ourselves get too confident thinks coud go wrong. It's a long season and anything can happen."

Shamrocks begin baseball year 4-1

By C.J. Risak
staff writer

Redford Catholic Central coach John Salter isn't talking about state championships just yet, but the Shamrocks, who won the title in 1987, appear to be headed for another good season.

The pieces have fallen into place for CC in the early going. The Shamrocks improved their record to 4-1 Monday, dumping host Ypsilanti 11-4.

Sophomore Scott Kapla started for CC, but was replaced by Dan Gusoff in the third inning. Gusoff allowed no runs, while recording the victory.

Paul Pirronello sparked the Shamrocks offensively, belting a home run and a double. Kevin Wheeler added two doubles and Steve Ross contributed two singles.

On Saturday, CC swept a doubleheader from host Redford Bishop Borgess at Capitol Park.

Senior hurler Keith Bozyk recorded 15 strikouts in the opening game, as the Shamrocks chalked up a 13-0 triumph.

Pirronello slugged a double and single to lead the Shamrocks offensive attack.

In the nightcap, CC handed the Spartans a 19-1 loss, thanks to a solid pitching performance from Steve Ross.

Dennis Pirronello hit a grand slam homer for the winners.

W.L. WESTERN 17, FRANKLIN 6: Jason Gross recorded eight strikeouts in four innings Monday to lead host Walled Lake Western (1-0) past Livonia Franklin (0-1).

In addition to scattering just two Franklin hits, Gross smacked a 3-run homer to spark the Western offense.

The Warriors, who jumped to a 9-0 lead after three innings, managed 20 hits off the Patriot pitching staff. Steve McCool suffered the loss for Franklin.

Scott Marinkovich went 3-for-4, including a triple and double in a losing cause.

THURSTON 8-2, WAYNE 0-7: Senior John Duty mustered 10 strikeouts over the course of seven innings Saturday to lead Redford Thurston past Wayne in the first game of a doubleheader, but the Zebras bounced back to win the second game.

Thurston (1-1) belted eight hits in the opening game, highlighted by Bob Isenegger's three-run double.

Starter Ron Hopkin suffered the loss for Wayne.

In the second game, Todd Tatom hurled seven innings, striking out 11 and scattering two hits to lead the Zebras.

Jason Muller took the loss for Thurston, surrendering five hits and five runs.

Brent Tapp and Jason Wetemore each had two hits for Wayne (2-1).

CRESTWOOD 9, GARDEN CITY 2: George Lang recorded 12 strikeouts Monday to lead Dearborn Heights Crestwood over host Garden City.

Lang pitched a complete game, giving up five hits, three of which came off the bat of Garden City slugger Paul Donaldson.

Steve Johnston was credited with the loss for Garden City. He surrendered four earned runs and three hits.

"In terms of weather, it was cold and wet," Garden City coach Bob Dropp said. "We just haven't had the opportunity to go outside and get that much accomplished."

ST. CLEMENT 4-2, ST. AGATHA 3-0: Rick Fowler pitched 10 innings and recorded 22 strikeouts over the course of two games Saturday, but it couldn't stop Center Line St. Clement, which swept a doubleheader against host Redford St. Agatha.

Brian Wilson suffered the defeat in the first game, allowing two earned runs. Ken Kroll, in relief of Fowler in the seventh of the second game, took the loss.

Defense concerns U-D coach

The future of University of Detroit's baseball team may depend on how well it recovers from the past.

In 1989, the Titans finished 30-26-1 overall and were 17-7 in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference regular season. Three-straight wins in the MCC tournament put them within a game of the title and a trip to the NCAA tournament, but Notre Dame swept two from U-D to upset those plans.

Nearly everyone returns from that Titan team. The only player missing is Mike Cloutier (from Birmingham Groves), and U-D veteran coach Bob Miller figures he has signed enough recruits to counter Cloutier's loss.

And yet, questions remain about the Titans. Several revolve around players from areas Miller loves to recruit — Redford, Livonia, Southfield, Westland, Farmington Hills and Birmingham.

Five Titans are graduates of Redford Union. Four others — Rick Tavormina of Westland (John Glenn), Lance Sullivan of Livonia (Churchill), Steve Wujczyk of Southfield (Southfield-Lathrup) and Doug Fitzer of Farmington Hills (Birmingham Brother Rice) — are all key elements in U-D's title plans.

BUT THUS far, in the Titans' 8-9 start (including last weekend's 2-2 split at MCC rival Xavier), the sure things have stumbled and the questions have sparkled.

As Miller described it, "My pitching's been better than I thought it would be, but our defense ... we've made too many errors on plays we should have made easily. I thought we were going to score runs and our defense would be OK. We had everybody back from last year, except Cloutier."

Instead, several key hitters have struggled but the pitching has been solid.

The mound corps starts with senior righthander Pat Miller, an RU grad who happens to be the coach's son. That's not what's earned him top billing, however; Miller is 2-1 with a 2.83 earned run average, 20 strikeouts and just four walks in 28⅔ innings this season.

MILLER WAS one of the question marks, even though he was 6-1 with a 3.75 ERA last year. Any pitcher who had elbow surgery 18 months ago — as Miller did — would have to be considered doubtful.

"Pat Miller's just pitching great," said the Titan coach. "He's been our best pitcher so far."

The pros are interested, too, according to coach Miller, who counted seven scouts with radar guns clocking Pat Miller at one-recent game (for the record, he throws in the 88-89 mph range).

So far, the arm's held up quite well. Miller (the coach) is hoping the same will be true for senior second baseman Dennis Bushart, another RU product.

Bushart hit .287 in '89, with six doubles, a triple, a homer and 25 runs batted in. He made 12 errors in 41 games at shortstop and second, and was named first-team All-MCC.

THOSE WERE the highlights. On May 7, Bushart injured his knee against Notre Dame and was lost for the final 16 games. He's back, and so far he's been better than ever. He's hitting .283 and has just two errors in 15 games, and last weekend he put on a rare display of power, clubbing three homers in as many at-bats against Xavier.

"He just had the stroke," said Miller of Bushart's homer outburst. The Redford native had just six in his three previous seasons at U-D. "There wasn't a fluke in the bunch. He was our whole offense on Saturday."

As far as his knee is concerned, Miller said, "He's wearing a big brace on it, but he's worked hard and looks good out there."

A couple of others have not fared so well for U-D. Mark Thierry, a sophomore righthander from RU, injured his shoulder during the spring trip and is sidelined with what may be a rotator cuff problem. His return to action this season is questionable.

Sullivan, a junior first baseman, broke his thumb diving for a grounder and will be redshirted this year. Sullivan, who hit .331 with 29 RBI in '89, was batting .278 in six games this season before getting hurt.

THOSE LOSSES have put a damper on the Titans' hopes. It also means others are going to have to make up for the missing offense — and so far, they haven't. Big producers last year were third baseman Alan Budnick and Wujczyk; both are struggling this season.

"He's been a streak hitter this year," said Miller of Wujczyk, the senior outfielder who hit .324 with seven doubles, four triples and two homers in '89. Miller has tried to use Wujczyk at first base, in place of Sullivan, but so far the S-L grad is hitting just .184.

"I don't know what it is, he gets into these ruts," said Miller of Wujczyk, noting an 0-for-11 streak against Xavier. "Teams are getting him out with a lot of off-speed stuff. He hasn't been disciplined enough at the plate, not like a fifth-year senior should be."

Another Titan who's struggling is Tavormina, the sophomore shortstop. He's hitting just .208 with four RBI after compiling a .328 average with 26 RBI last season. Worse, he's struggled in the field. In '89 he made 21 errors in 45 games; this season, he has 17 errors in as many games.

"HE'S PRESSING like heck," said Miller. "(Tavormina) hasn't been fielding because he's worried about his hitting, and he hasn't been hitting because he's worried about his fielding.

"We had a talk the other day and I told him he's our shortstop, so stop pressing and enjoy the game."

A player whose record is struggling is Fitzer, a junior lefthander. "Fitzer's pitched great," said Miller. "He's really come on. He's taken charge out there. It's a damn shame we haven't backed him up."

Fitzer is 1-2 with a 3.47 ERA and 18 strikeouts in 23½ innings. He was the loser in Sunday's 5-2 defeat at Xavier, but four of the five runs he allowed were unearned. His teammates committed four errors behind him.

Mike Stefanski, a junior from RU, has been a plus behind the plate. As a sophomore, he hit .336 with nine doubles and 24 RBI; this season, he's batting .273 with six RBI and has "thrown everybody out (trying to steal)," said Miller. "He's got a great arm."

And U-D has great potential. Last season, the Titans started 13-16-1 and were 4-4 in the MCC before rolling off eight-straight wins, all within the league. They won 17 of their last 27, including 11 consecutive MCC games.

If the injuries subside and hitting and defense rebounds, a similar finish could be upcoming.

Falcons signal change with 10-5 win

By Brad Emons
staff writer

The baseball season is just beginning, but Farmington High served notice Monday that things could be different this year in the Lakes Division race of the Western Lakes Activities Association.

The Falcons, perennial also-rans, knocked off host Westland John Glenn under blustery and cold conditions, 10-5.

"They took their lumps for two or three years when they brought up some freshman, but it's paying off for them now and I think they'll be right in the hunt," said Glenn coach Norm Hoenes, whose team has ruled the division for years. "Their pitcher (Chris Schmid) is tough and they look like they can swing the bat. They made all the plays, considering the weather, and that's the best I've seen them look in four years."

Schmid, a senior left-hander, worked seven innings to pick up the win. He scattered six hits and six walks to go along with eight strikeouts. He held the Rockets in check over the final four innings, allowing only one hit and one run.

"HE DOESN'T have the fastest fastball," said Farmington coach Kevin Kansman of his ace, "but he mixes it up with a knuckle ball and curve and that's what makes him effective."

Schmid also proved potent with the bat, going 3-for-4. Through the first two games he is 6-for-7.

"He's hot right now and sometimes all it takes is that one guy who can carry you," Kansman said. "He's a good hitter. He was on the varsity as a freshman and the last two years he hit the ball hard, but usually right at somebody."

Glenn, which opened its season Saturday with a loss to Plymouth Canton, scored a pair of runs in the first.

Eric Stover scored on a wild pitch and Lawrence Scheffer crossed home on an infield error.

But Farmington came back with four runs in the top of the second, sending 10 men to the plate. Gary Shelp singled in one run. P.J. Green forced home another when he was hit by a pitch. Kevin Young walked with the bases loaded to ring up another, while Kevin VanOrd scored the fourth run on a passed ball.

Glenn cut the deficit to 4-3 on Stover's RBI single in the bottom of the second, but the Falcons answered with five runs in the top of the third, highlighted by Dave Wilson's three-run double. Young and Eric Miller also knocked in runs as each singled.

THE ROCKETS closed to within four, 9-5, on an RBI single by Gary Pierce in the third, followed by Jerry Shippe's run batted in on fielders choice in the fourth.

Farmington added an insurance run in the sixth off Glenn reliever Brian Stephenson, who was the most successful of three Rocket pitchers on the day.

Mark Johnston, the starter, lasted only 1⅔ innings before giving way to Stover. Stephenson worked the final three innings.

"We're really looking for somebody on our pitching staff to step up," said Hoenes, "but until that happens we're going to have to score runs to win. This is the worst shape we've been with our pitching in quite awhile and that's unfortunate.

"But we also gave up five unearned runs. Our catcher dropped a third strike, which cost us (in the second inning). Today with had enough on base to score some more runs. Not to take anything away from Farmington, but I thought we could have put more pressure on them."

For the time being, Kansman is not feeling the pressure of being a contender. He's only seeking improvement with each outing.

"WE STILL MADE mistakes and we still have a lot of things to work on," he said. "I think our defense is good. It's solid, but we have to have a few more games to get it down. Each and every player has to work hard individually. There's a little bit of pressure, but we just have to worry about going out and executing. You've got to walk before you run."

The Falcons, however, got over a big stumbling block in Glenn.

"John Glenn is always good," Kansman said. "But one of our goals coming in was not to be intimidated by them. Last year (when the Falcons were 10-12), we played everybody virtually even except for Glenn. Today we accomplished one of our goals and that was to not be intimidated. I don't think we've every beaten them since the league was formed (in 1983). It was a big day for us no doubt and I'm glad we got the game in."

Canton breaks 6 records

long jump (13-1) and Simpson in the shot put (30-3). Brighton won the relay in 11:10.

The Plymouth Canton girls scored nine points at the Spartan Relays. The shuttle hurdle team of Karina Kilpelainen, Angela Fountain, Erin Olenech and Tricia Russo was second (59.0), and the 1600 relay unit of Kristy Brugar, Monica Pellow, Christie Saffron and Kim Gudeth was sixth (4:27.4).

THE CHIEFS also set six indoor school records. In addition to the shuttle hurdle time, the others were accomplished by Jessica Souter in the long jump (14-11), Kilpelainen in the 55 hurdles (9.5), Amy Smith in the 3200 run (12:25.5), Gudeth in the 800 run (2:33.1) and the sprint medley team of Brugar, Michelle Dean, Alicia King and Pellow (3:18.9).

Farmington, with many of its team members also taking the ACT test, took only seven girls to East Lansing. Shelli Gaul was third in the high jump (4-10) and sixth in the hurdles (9.1), and Jennifer Kiel was fourth in the 800 run (2:25).

The Plymouth Salem boys didn't score but had the goal of doing well in time trials and filling out its lineup, coach Gary Balconi said, citing distance runners Brian Uryga, Mike Patterson, John Thomas and Todd Cimo and sprinters Steve Burlison and Scott Austin.

Myrna Partrich

Roller skating does have fitness benefits

Dear Myrna: I'm a 25-year-old male, California born. I've always roller skated on the streets of Los Angeles. I recently moved to Detroit (have not seen summer yet). Do Michiganders skate the streets? Is it good exercise?

Sorry to say, maybe due to our climate, Michiganders are not big street skaters.

Now that doesn't mean you won't have some company. I think some of the suburbs which have a business district in the center of town (Novi, Rochester, Northville, Plymouth, Birmingham, Grosse Pointe) might welcome your skating the streets.

Is it good exercise?

Well, skating does have some fitness benefits. If you are zooming along as fast as 15-20 miles per hour, your heart rate can be well into its target zone (as long as you have enough street). The exact calorie expenditure is unknown.

Today's skates are constructed to absorb most of the shocks of the road, so there is noticably less stress on the lower body's musculoskeletal system. The muscles in your legs and butt are worked.

Skating uses the same muscle groups as cross-country skiing in a similar way. I think most of all — skating is fun! A great cross training activity to be done on your designated easier workout day.

Spring is coming and Michigan is beautiful. I'm sure you will love to take to the roads and sightsee.

(Myrna Partrich, co-owner of The Workout Company, Inc. of Bloomfield Township and a recent appointee to the President's Council on Physical Fitness, is happy to answer any questions readers may have regarding exercise. Please send your letters to: Sports Department, Myrna Partrich, 805 E. Maple, Birmingham, Mi. 48009.)

Men, if you're about to turn 18, it's time to register with Selective Service at any U.S. Post Office.
It's quick. It's easy. And it's the law.

Traveling thieves take advantage of victim's greed

By LeAnne Rogers
staff writer

A person's greed can cloud his better judgment, a fact that traveling thieves know and are more than willing to take advantage of.

"There is no free lunch. Nothing is as good as it sounds. Don't pay half of what you think something is worth," said Harold Penxa, co-chairman of the Michigan Gypsy Criminal Activities Task Force. "We are incredibly greedy. Especially when we are over 60."

After spending the winter in warmer southern or western states, spring finds traveling thieves heading back to northern states like Michigan to work their scams.

Speaking at a Neighborhood Watch meeting last week, Penxa outlined the types of crimes committed by traveling thieves and provided insights into how their subculture operates.

"For the first time, this spring with 50 percent confidence, I can say I know what they are up to."

Police recently stopped a vehicle from Florida with improper license plates, he said, with mounted spraying equipment.

"The spraying equipment was so new that they didn't even have any gunk in it," Penxa said. "That's the stuff they spray on your driveway. Then it runs off and makes your grass black."

OTHER FAVORITE scams for traveling thieves include selling shoddy merchandise at cut rate prices, store diversions, a bujo or switching the bag and home invasions, according to Penxa.

Home invasions feature someone posing as a utility worker who tells the homeowner that they have been overcharged for water/gas/electrical service.

The phony utility worker offers the homeowner a cash refund but needs change for a large bill. By going to get change, the homeowner lets the traveling thief and an accomplice know where money is kept.

While the fake utility worker distracts the homeowner, the accomplice slips in and out of the house with the cash.

"The average age of the victim is 83 to 84 years. They (traveling thieves) know a lot about us," Penxa said. "They know that if we are over 79, we keep money at home a lot and don't like banks. They know we put money in a shoe box or under something."

WORKING WITH the southeast Michigan utility companies which sent flyers with their bills, Penxa said this type of crime was reduced 84 percent last year.

"I don't think we will see a resurgence of the home invasions," he said. "People need to beware in the spring of the driveway jobs."

During interviews with traveling thieves who are in police custody, Penxa said he asked how they find their elderly victims.

"The house and yard is all neat, but there are no swings or a basket, ball hoop," he said. "There is a white picket fence or white painted rocks around the yard. There might be a fruit tree. No one under 40 has a fruit tree in the yard."

A newly developed scam by traveling thieves involves buying a car, Penxa said, insuring it with multiple insurance companies. The car is reported stolen and the thief collects from each insurance company.

"The car will be recovered in another state and sold at an auction with a clear title," he said. "A traveling thief there will buy the car, put the doors back on and reinsure it with multiple companies."

The record for this scam has been six times on the same vehicle, Penxa said, garning about $500,000.

"The insurance companies don't talk to each other. They are competitors and they are greedy," he said.

INSURANCE FRAUD can also involve houses, Penxa said, where traveling thieves report a home break-in and vandalism, just prior to heading for another state.

"They move their stuff out and use pre-slashed furniture to show the damage. Then they ship the pre-slashed stuff for another family to use."

Credit card fraud is crime committed by traveling thieves which costs millions annually, Penxa said.

"They don't care what information they put on the form. They know they have the right to see why their application was rejected. They correct the problem. It make take three tries, but they get the credit card."

To reduce opportunities for traveling thieves, Penxa said residents need to key an eye out for strangers, phony utility workers or persons selling door to door.

"Call the police. It's the only way to fight it. Watch out for your neighbors who might not get out that much."

This organized crime difficult to catch

By LeAnne Rogers
staff writer

Whether they are called gypsies or the more current name of traveling thieves, they are a unique kind of organized crime, according to Harold Penxa.

"They have specific characteristics and method of operation. It is organized crime. They have a rigid and well defined structure."

Penxa is co-chairman of the Michigan Gypsy Criminal Activities Task Force, which was formed in 1984 under the investigative resources unit of the Michigan State Police.

During his work with the task force, Penxa has compiled information about the workings of the gypsy subculture.

Although gypsies are a minority recognized by the federal government, Penxa said in the criminal context the term gypsies does not refer to an ethnic group.

"There is a large ethnic gypsy population in the metropolitan area that are hardworking people," he said. "It would not be fair to lump them all in one pot. People think they know a gypsy when they see one and it causes a fair amount of prejudice."

THE GYPSIES, or traveling thieves as they are known in law enforcement circles, come from all over the world. Scottish travelers have their own town, Travelers Rest in South Carolina.

Traveling thieves are organized utilizing the same structure as organized crime, Penxa said, with soldiers on the bottom filtering illegally garnered money up the ladder to the bosses.

"They make a tremendous amount of money and begin working at 16 or 17. We catch them all the time driving at 15. They don't worry about licenses or get them in different states or names."

Traveling thieves don't obtain Social Security numbers or pay taxes, Penxa said, making $250,000 to $275,000 a year.

"Its very difficult to prosecute traveling thieves, even for the Internal Revenue Service. They like to build a case over three or four years. By then the gypsies are gone."

Traveling thieves will have three names Penxa noted, a public name which might be a humorous monicker of two first names, a gyspy name by which they are known among traveling thieves and a secret name known only to them and their mothers.

A FUNDAMENTAL problem in dealing with traveling thieves is that they operate under a culture that doesn't recognize law and government, Penxa commented.

"You can't think of their culture within our framework. They believe we're cattle put on the earth for their amusement and to take advantage of us. They see the things we do and think we are fools."

Ninja turtles

Scriptwriter put final touches on current movie

By Victor Swanson
special writer

COWABUNGA, DUDES and Dudettes. The Ninja Turtles are here.

That is, the movie "Teenage Mutuant Ninja Turtles" is now showing at a movie theater near you. And it's made possible in part because of a North Farmington High School graduate, Todd W. Langen, who wrote the final script.

"It's about four turtles who live in the sewers of New York City," said Todd Langen during a recent telephone interview from his home in North Hollywood, Calif. "They mutated through some radioactive ooze that was spilled into a sewer one time — from just regular, normal turtles to large human-size turtles. They're each about 15 years old.

"The general plotline of the movie is that it's about the turtles' first foray really into the outside world, the above world of New York City. And what happens in the movie is that they come across their arch-villain for the first time, who is known as the Shredder, something of a Darth Vaderish kind of figure with razor-sharp armor."

In the story, the turtles must rescue their mentor, a mutant rat called Splinter, who has been kidnapped by Shredder.

There are four turtles.

"FIRST OF ALL, there's Leonardo, who wears the blue mask," Langen said. "Each turtle is generally identified by the color of their mask and also the type of weapon which they wield. In Leonardo's case, he wears a blue mask, and he wields what are known as katana, which are ninja swords. Leonardo is sort of like the unofficial leader of the group.

"The next turtle would be Donatello, who wears a purple mask, and his weapon is called a bo, which is a ninja staff, about three-or-four-feet long. And Donatello is more of a quiet, introspective intellectual kind of turtle. He's very good at fixing things. He has a tendency to look on life with a little bit of a sense of wonder.

"The third turtle would be a turtle called Michelangelo. And he wears an orange mask, and his weapons are nunchucks. Michelangelo is kind of the wisecracking rock-and-roll surf turtle. He speaks a little bit like a California Dude.

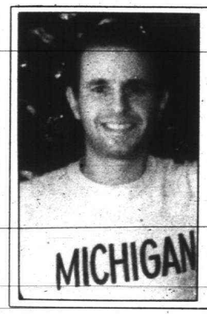
"Finally, there's Raphael, who wears the red mask, and his weapons are called sai, which are like ninja daggers And Raphael — I describe — as Mr. Intensity, the turtle with an attitude."

ONE OF THE other good characters in the story is April O'Neal, a television news reporter for Channel Three. (In the syndication cartoon series, it's Channel Six.) Langen described April as "a very strong-willed kind of person, very good reporter. She enjoys having a good time with the turtles."

One of the other bad characters in the movie is Tatsu, who, as described by Langen, is the right-hand man to Shredder and "is sort of bulldogish, sort of a Japanese character."

Tatsu does not appear in the syndicated series, shown on WXON-TV, Channel 20, in the Detroit area. The TV series is less dark than the movie, which has been made for adults, too.

"I had never seen the syndicated series," Langen said. "In fact, purposely I avoided that because that's not the type of treatment that we were going for in the movie. What I did was, I did look at some of the early comic books."



'I had never seen the syndicated series. In fact, purposely I avoided that because that's not the type of treatment that we were going for in the movie. What I did was, I did look at some of the early comic books.'
— Todd Langen

He declared, "I didn't have a lot of time to do research, 'cause they were in a big hurry to get the script out."

Langen became involved with "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" when the producers of the movie needed someone to rewrite the first script, which had been written by Bobby Herbeck.

During the writers' strike of 1988, Langen met people on the picket line, to whom he was able to show some of his sample scripts of shows. One day, he met an executive at Paramount Studios, who saved one of his sample scripts, and when the producers of "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" were looking for someone to rewrite their script, she suggested Langen.

Langen met with the producers and director and got the assignment.

"I BASICALLY came back to my apartment, sat down for two solid weeks and just wrote the screenplay. I was under the gun at the time. They wanted the script in like three weeks. And I just decided to sit down and work on it every waking hour of the day."

The strike of 1988 also was important for Langen in contributing to his working on "The Wonder Years" TV series. He wrote a sample script for the then-new series, and the producers liked it. He met with them and was able to write a real script for the show.

"I was nominated for an Emmy for that episode, and I just won the WGA (Writers Guild of America) award a week ago for Best Television Episode of 1989 for that episode."

Currently, Langen is the story editor on "The Wonder Years."

"A story editor is basically a writer," Langen explained. "In theory, a story editor has a few more responsibilities, which is to help develop other stories other than the ones you yourself write and also to do a little bit of rewriting on other episodes other than your own."

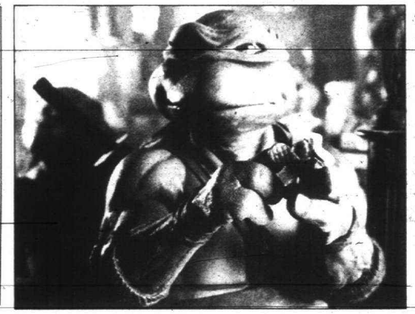
Langen's first work for television came through his showing of sample scripts for "Family Ties" to writer-producer Michael J. Weithorn, after Weithorn had left that series, when Weithorn was looking for writers to contribute to a series under development, "The Pursuit of Happiness" (which aired during the 1989-88 season and featured Brian Keith and Paul Provenza).

LANGEN, WHO earned a master's degree in aerospace engineering from the University of Michigan, went to California in 1983 to work for Hughes Aircraft. Once there, he soon envisioned what his life might be in 40 years or so, working as an engineer. The thought did not please him. During his spare time, he began writing a screenplay for a movie.

"I felt that writing was the best way to get started in the entertainment business," Langen remembered. "I just sat down after work over the course of the summer. I'd just take an old packing box from moving out here and put it on the bed every night with a little intensity lamp and just write on loose-leaf paper."

Langen's first produced script for the movies is not that script. Instead it's "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles."

"I don't know how the movie's going to play as far as the public's concerned, but it's been a very good experience for me," he said.



Teenage mutant ninja turtles have gone from comics to television to the movie screen.

● Four acts

The Attic Theatre presents "The Ann Arbor Road Show," four acts including singer Dick Siegel, blues and boogies master Mr. B, "new age vaudevillian" O.J. Anderson and storyteller LaRon Williams at 8 p.m. Thursday-Saturday, April 12-14, in Detroit. Tickets are $16. Tickets may be charged by calling 875-8284.

● 'Threepenny Opera'

Students of the School of Music's Musical Theatre Program will present one of the milestones in musical theater history, "The Threepenny Opera."

Written by Bertolt Brecht to music by Kurt Weill in the translation by Marc Blitzstein, "The Threepenny Opera" plays Thursday-Sunday, April 19-22, at the Power Center in Ann Arbor. Visiting artist Dona D. Vaughn will direct the production, and Robert Debbaut will conduct the University Symphony Orchestra. Performances are at 8 p.m. except for Sunday, at 2 p.m.

Tickets are $10 and $7, with student seating available at $5. Tickets may be bought at the League Ticket Office in the Michigan League Building. To charge tickets, or for more information, call 764-0450 or 763-TKTS.

● Star search

From 8:30 p.m. every Sunday, Whispers Lounge in the Novi Hilton is making the opportunity available for would-be performers to sing for an audience. This is aided by a new laser-vision disc-player invention, TV monitor and a "key controller," which automatically sets the key of the music to the singer's voice.

Each Sunday, performers will compete before a live audience and a talent agent who will decide nightly winners. Weekly winners, awarded dinner for two in the Swan restaurant, also will compete in a grand "sing-off" at the end of four weeks.

The grand prize winner will have a videotape sent to Ed McMahon's "Star Search" TV program as an audition for a spot on the show, and also will receive an airline flight for two to anywhere in the continental United States.

● 'Uncle Vanya'

Hilberry Repertory Theatre presents David Mamet's adaptation of Anton Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya," beginning Saturday, April 21, following a Friday, April 20, preview. It will continue in rotating repertory through Saturday, May 19.

"Uncle Vanya" takes to the Hilberry stage for the first time in this new adaptation. For more information, call the Hilberry Theatre box office on the Wayne State University campus in Detroit at 577-2972.

● WSU theater

A Shakespeare production directed by the Stratford Festival's Marti Maraden, a return engagement by Brian Bedford and a play by Wayne State University graduate Elaine Jackson are among highlights of the 1990-91 season at the Hilberry and Bonstelle theaters, as announced by Robert T. Hazzard, director of the theaters at WSU in Detroit.

Maraden will direct Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" at the Hilberry. Brian Bedford's "The Lunatic, the Lover and the Poet," which played three soldout performances in February at the Hilberry, will return for three more performances next season.

Highlighting the Bonstelle Theatre's five-play season is "Paper Dolls," a play by WSU graduate and former Bonstelle actress Elaine Jackson, who won the 1978-79 Rockefeller Award for Playwriting, the 1979 Langston Hughes Playwriting Award and a National Endowment for the Arts Award for playwriting in 1983. To request free brochures with complete information, call 577-2972.

An array of symphony orchestras and conductors, chamber ensembles, solo recitalists, choral, opera, jazz, mime, dance companies and even acrobats will perform on the upcoming season, the 112th of the University Musical Society.

Some 40 concerts are grouped in the familiar Choral Union, Chamber Arts and Choice Series, but with new twists. Seven new series are drawn from the basic offerings, tailored for families and for jazz, dance and vocal aficionados. For more information, contact the University Musical Society, Burton Memorial Tower, Ann Arbor 48109, phone 764-2538.

Frank Sinatra croons Thursday, April 19, through Sunday, April 22, at the Fox Theatre in Detroit.

● New season

Meadow Brook Theatre is featuring two Broadway musicals, "Cabaret" and "Pump Boys and Dinettes," plus the Michigan premiere of "What I Did Last Summer" in its 1990-91 lineup. The theater on the Oakland University campus in Rochester Hills will open its 25th season with "Cabaret," Oct. 4-28. After 38½ years Agatha Christie's "The Mousetrap" is still playing in London, making it the world's longest continuously running play. It will be at Meadow Brook on Nov. 1-25. clarification

Regarding the story about the Early Monday Morning Show comedy revue ensemble, the Attic Theatre benefit performance will be at 7 p.m., not 5 p.m., on Sunday, April 15, as was stated in the article that ran Thursday, April 5.

'Wait Until Dark' is still intriguing

Performances of the Birmingham Theatre production of "Wait Until Drk" by Frederick Knott continue through Sunday, May 6. For ticket information, call the box office at 644-3533.

Barbara Michals

Classic old mysteries never seem to die. Instead of fading away they are revieved in an attempt to recreate the thrills they once offered. "Wait Until Dark" at the Birmingham Theatre is a competent production rendered impotent by changing times.

The 1966 play by Frederick Knott is a victim of our changing sensibilities. The plot relies on the premise that an unwary traveler accepted a doll from a mysterious woman at an airport. Now a crazed killer (Tony Musante) and his two accomplices are terrorizing the traveler's blind wife (Bonnie Franklin) in an attempt to locate the doll, which holds a valuable drug stash.

Who would be foolish enough to accept such a package in our current age of terrorist bombs and posted warning signs? With random, senseless violence filling the daily newspapers, it seems odd that a hardened killer would go to great lengths to con the woman instead of finding a more expedient way to make her talk. Surely it strains credibility that a blind woman walks around Manhattan without fear of being mugged, routinely keeps her door unlocked, and admits strangers unhesitatingly.

As the blind Susy, Franklin gives her character plenty of spunk and does an excellent job of never letting her blank gaze falter. Relying on her other sharpened senses, Susy cleverly sees through the murderer's elaborate scam and starts to muster her defenses. That her own plans are not foolproof adds to Susy's credibility, but Franklin never seems all that terrified despite realizing her danger.

MUSANTE ISN'T given much character to work with. He is sufficiently crazed and coldly menacing, at times edging towards caricature. His two accomplices are at least more interesting, con men conned into unwilling compliance. As the smooth-talking Mike who must earn Susy's trust, Peter Jay Fernandez has a strong, pleasant delivery despite early line problems Friday night. Edward James Hyland is very fine as the cruder of the pair who poses as a hard-boiled police detective.

Jacqueline Cohen is wonderful as Gloria, Susy's obnoxious young neighbor full of deviousness and childish mood swings. She explains, for example, that her temper tantrum should be forgiven because she only threw unbreakables all over the floor.

Maureen Heffernan's direction is generally sound, and the production moves along smoothly. As an exercise in deductive reasoning "Wait Until Dark" is still intriguing. It just isn't the thriller it once was.

Barbara Michals teaches high school English in Southfield. A theater critic for the last 15 years, she is an inveterate playgoer who regularly catches up on all the New York productions.

Artist-visionary unites beauty, form, function

By C.L. Rugenstein
staff writer

BEING AN ARTIST IS a philosophy, a way of looking at life rather than a conscious act.

"A painting or a piece of sculpture is a by-product, the end result of that really," said Michele Oka Doner explaining the philosophy behind her 25-year career.

Doner, whose career got its commercial start in Michigan, was in Rochester recently for the opening of her latest exhibition — "Michele Oka Doner at Mid-Career," at Oakland University's Meadow Brook Gallery through May 20.

Doner's public works are found in such diverse places as the entrance to the Hayden Planetarium at the American Museum of Natural History in New York, the sidewalk at the Children's Museum of Manhattan and the 156-year-old Franklin Cemetery in Franklin, not far from where the Doners used to live.

Three new works, textured bronze benches designed to be utilitarian as well as thought provoking, will soon grace the grounds of the University of Michigan's main campus, between the natural sciences and chemistry buildings.

"The benches are circular because I don't think people like to sit lined-up," Doner said.

THE LARGEST IS 10 feet in diameter, the smallest, less than seven feet in diameter, is yet to be determined. They're part of U-M urban planner Fred Mayer's attempts to make the campus more esthetically pleasing.

Despite a prolific career, Doner didn't start formally expressing her inward art until she was accepted in the art school at U-M. High school art classes struck her as being "rinkey-dink — in high school they didn't have a well-developed art department."

Before then, her medium was nature itself; bits of shell, fossils, bone, whatever nature provided along the stretch of ocean near her Miami Beach home.

"It was rich," she said, "the only part of the country that's subtropical."

'An artist is a person who expresses the common needs of the tribe, to articulate certain hopes and fears (as did early cave painters) — will there be enough mammoths for winter, will it rain enough to grow crops?'

— Michele Oak Doner

Her family background is also rich. One grandfather came from a long line of religious scribes.

"But he was the rebellious son," Doner said with a smile, "and went to an art academy in Odessa (Russia,)" later painting wall murals in convents.

She also lived with great art reproduction canvases of works like Rembrandt's "Noble Slav," and one unique Cezanne.

It was a seascape of Odessa, painted in the bottom of a heart-shaped, wooden fruit basket about 10-12 inches across.

"I loved that painting," she said. "I could look in and see the sea and smell the ocean breeze."

HER EARLIEST MEDIUM was sand, which she sculpted with her hands and decorated with bits of shell.

Though she didn't have formal training prior to college, Doner said she worked with her hands and exercised herself visually every day by arranging flowers, or setting the table in different, interesting ways.

She rejects the luxury of artistic isolation — the artist removing himself from the mainstream of common experience to create in solitude.

"An artist is a person who expresses the common needs of the tribe, to articulate certain hopes and fears (as did early cave painters) — will there be enough mammoths for winter, will it rain enough to grow crops?"

"The focus with the situation of dying cities and tremendous social changes is the (return to the idea of the) artist as visionary, the visual expression of the tribe."

Doner is currently working on six public projects in six different cities. She won several commissions through national competitions.

The Herald Square project combines both her Michigan and New York City backgrounds (where she and husband Frederick Doner moved in 1981). The 200-foot long wall, titled "Radiant Site," will utilize 11,000 gold luster Pewabic Pottery tiles from Michigan in the Herald Square subway station.

Another project may give the venerable city of Venice, Italy, a new lease on life.

Doner is working with a new technology as a medium — electromagnetic deposition.

"IT'S AN EVOLUTIONARY TECHNOLOGY which will allow us to grow barrier reefs where needed" in the same way pearl farmers now grow cultured pearls she said. "I have five small sculptures growing in (Venice's) north lagoon."

The process uses a carbon anode and cathode — "the cathode is the sculpture in water. It's hooked up to a small car battery, and the accretion builds up" — like the oyster farmer's pearl.

The project was funded by the Samuel Kress Foundation, which seeks to preserve the world's cultural monuments.

It sounds like something from science fiction, but then, as Doner said, "I like to invent new ways to do things."

The exhibition continues through May 20. Hours are 2-5 p.m. Tuesday-Friday, 1-4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday and through the first intermission when Meadow Brook Theater is in action.

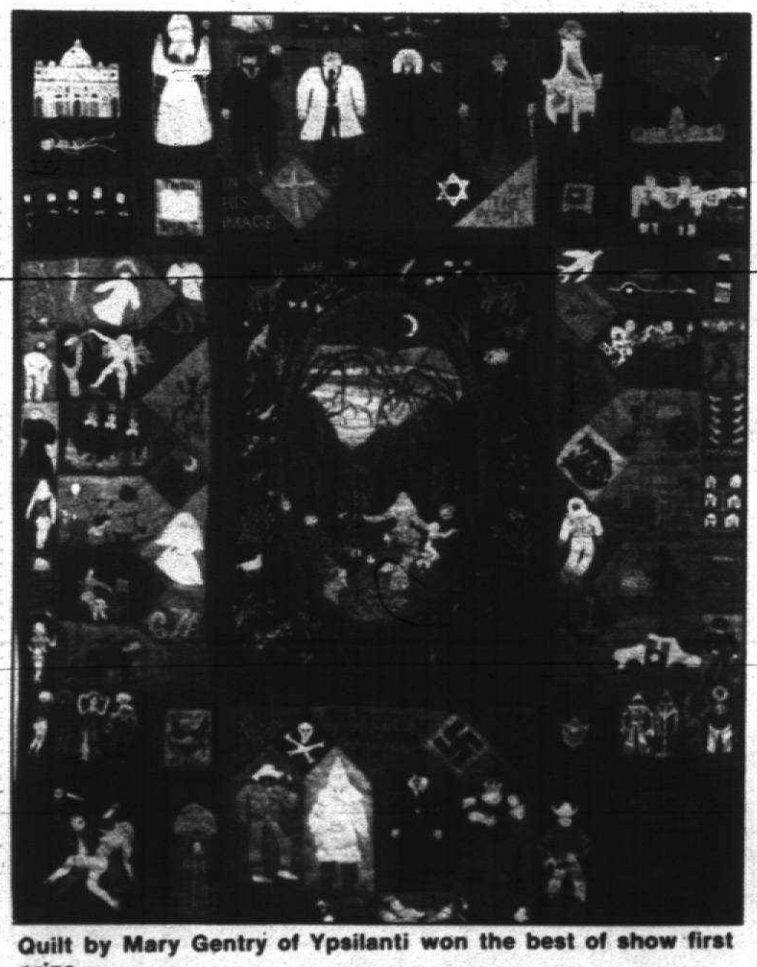
Juror says she responds to risk takers



Quilt by Mary Gentry of Ypsilanti won the best of show first prize.

An interview with Gracie Mansion is an intimidating proposition.

After all, she maintains not one, but two, successful galleries in New York City where she is recognized for her ability to find and showcase new artists.

Mansion has been written about in every publication from Art News to the New York Times and was described in one article as "the toast of New York."

She came into the public spotlight in 1982 when she opened her first gallery. The Gracie Mansion Gallery, Loo Division, in the bathroom of her East Village apartment. Attention-getting devices like the bathroom opening and even her memorable name (the home of the mayor of New York is also called Gracie Mansion) soon helped her become a media favorite.

Her galleries have a reputation for representing the best in New York City's eclectic new artists and Mansion found many of these new artists from slides. Since she is always interested in finding new talent, Mansion agreed to come to Michigan to be a juror in the 1990 Michigan Fine Arts Competition at the Birmingham Bloomfield Art Association. How would Michigan stack up?

"I'VE JURIED A NUMBER of shows . .at the Carnegie Museum, the Baltimore Museum . . . ," she said. "They're interesting because I get to see things I would not normally see. I never would have seen these artists without coming here."

"Besides," she said, "I have family in Bloomfield Hills."

Mansion had to look through more than 800 slides for this show. She eventually selected 120 pieces from the slides for the Fine Arts Competition, but didn't see any of the actual pieces until the first day of judging.

"The work is very professionsl," she said. "I was really pleased when I saw it in person. There was a lot of really original work."

She's right. The pieces that made it to the finals are especially exciting this year, according to competition organizers. Entries include a broken television with photographs plastered throughout the inside and a funky patchwork quilt depicting scenes of almost everything imaginable — from religious events to violence and oppression.

What does Mansion look for in a piece of art work?

"How I respond to it," she said. "It's very subjective, like buying art. It just depends on what hits a particular chord."

"I LOOK FOR THINGS that are very creative in the way they represent something," she continued. "I respond to risk taking — in subject matter, in issues, using a medium in a whole new way or doing it in a more interesting way. In looking at 800 slides, I saw a lot of the same type of images; I looked for people who tried to strike out."

In other words, viewing hundreds and hundreds of landscapes gets a bit old after a while.

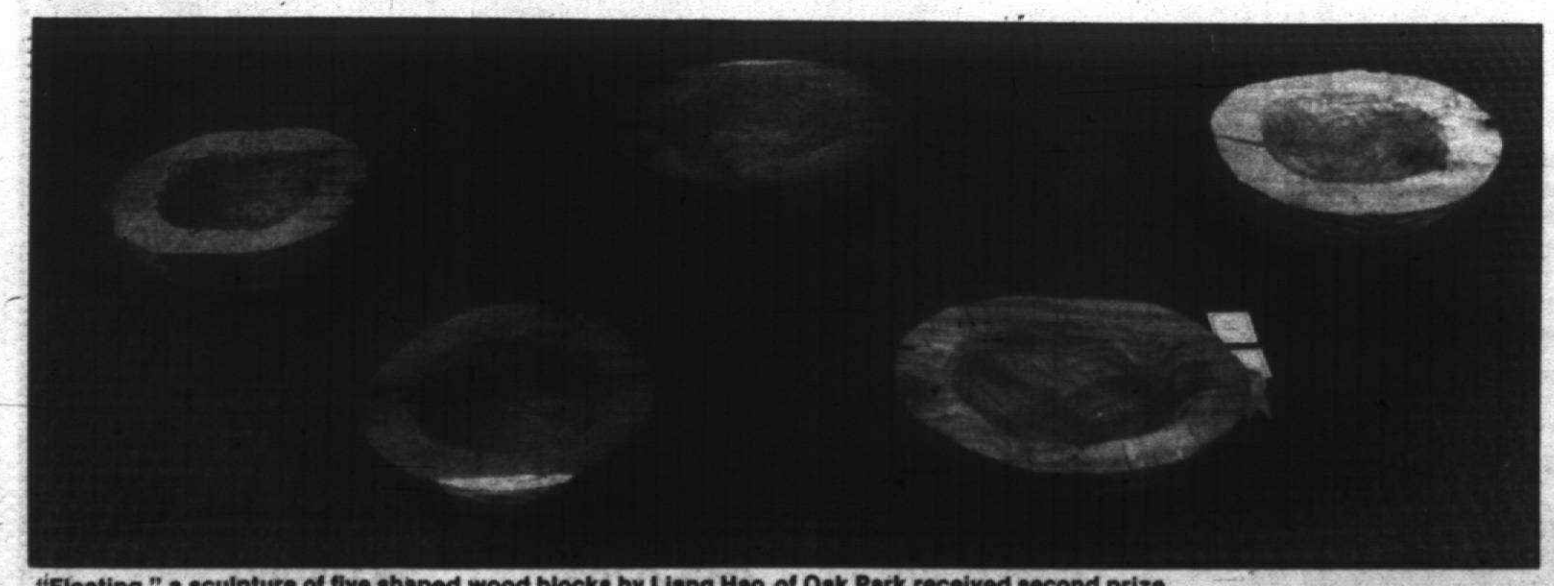
"I was most pleased with the photographs," she added, "Something must be a good influence around here."

She praised organizations like the Birmingham/Bloomfield Art Association: "There aren't close-knit organizations like this in New York City. There it's every person for himself."

Mansion said that a young artist should decide what his or her goals are before figuring out whether they should move to New York. "It depends on what you want to do. If you want to make a space in history, go to New York," she said.

"I guess if you're really great, you'll eventually be discovered," she said, "Of course, by that time you may be dead."

Quilt wins top prize in Michigan exhibit



"Floating," a sculpture of five shaped wood blocks by Liang Hao of Oak Park received second prize.

A quilt by Mary Gentry of Ypsilanti won best of show and the $2,000 Arts Foundation of Michigan award in the Michigan Fine Arts Competition at Birmingham Bloomfield Art Association.

Second prize ($750) winner was "Floating," a sculpture of four carved wood blocks by Liang Hao of Oak Park. The juror's award of excellence ($500) went to Swayne Szot of Maple City. Additional juror's awards of excellence ($250) were given to Kass Doyle of Bloomfield Hills, Pieter Favier, Oak Park and Jaymes Leahy, Bloomfield Hills.

Artists winning honorable mention included: Chris Allen-Wickler and Roger Allen-Wickler of West Bloomfield; Ilene Curts, Mason; Brian Fekete, Detroit; Matthew Holland, Haslett; Hideki Kihata, Saginaw; Roger Mastson, Clarkston; and Nancy Adams Nash, Acme.

Others who won honorable mention awards were: S.J. Northerner, Bloomfield Hills; Eliza Proctor, Bloomfield Hills; Bruce Thayer, Mason; Carol Wald, Detroit; and Michael Edson, Ann Arbor.

The juror was New York City gallery owner, Gracie Mansion. The show continues through May 12. Hours are 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday-Saturday, 1516 S. Cranbrook, Birmingham.

Area groups to perform 'Requiem'

St. Genevieve Parish Choir along with area singers and instrumentalists will present John Rutter's "Requiem" at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow night in St. Genevieve Church.

The choir will also include singers from other churches in Livonia and from Wayne State University. Christa Grix will be featured on the harp.

The performance will be conducted by LaVerne Lieberknecht, director of music at St. Genevieve where she also teaches vocal music in the church school.

Lieberknecht is completing her master of music degree in choral conducting at Wayne State University. While at Wayne, she has served as assistant conductor to Professor Dennis J. Tini. She is currently serving as assistant conductor to guest conductors Dr. Robert Harris and Dr. Marilyn Jones as well as coordinating choral music activities at WSU.

SOPRANO SOLOIST will be Lisa Lieberknecht, a voice performance major at Wayne University and a student of Carolyn Grimes. Lisa Lieberknecht has been featured soloist with the Wayne State University Choral Union and the Women's Chorale. She was recently featured as soprano soloist with the Wayne State University choruses and orchestra in a performance of Mozart's "Vesperae Solennes de Confessore." She is the daughter of Richard and LaVerne Lieberknecht.

John Rutter, a well-known contemporary English composer, has taken the traditional words of the Latin Requiem and coupled them with the English text of the Burial Service 1662 of Common Prayer, in this original and very beautiful setting of the "Requiem."

The public is invited. A free will offering will be taken. St. Genevieve is at 29015 Jamison, two blocks south of Five Mile Road and east of Middlebelt Road. For more information, call 427-5220.

Good pencil renderings defy detection

David Messing

In the world of video games, I am getting progressively worse.

I used to be the best. To be better than Dad was an unattainable goal — almost irreverent even to think about.

But when I look back, I have to say that my boys were just little tots and the video games that I mastered were merely two-dimensional dots and lights with simple eat-or-be-eaten plots, like Pac-Man.

Now the video figures are wonderfully detailed and almost holographic in their realism. It's no longer a yellow dot eating a bunch of white dots. It's about warfare, hostages, cyborgs, ninjas and a little pipefitter named Mario.

It's about hand-eye coordination. It's about other worlds and time warps.

[illegible] know my muffled beeps and groans of Dad's video game. Perhaps they even chuckle aloud as they picture my mouth jerked to the side and a wild-eyed countenance as I try to avoid a video catastrophe.

WELL, PUTTING videos aside, there is an old favorite in the world of art. It's relatively easy to master. It's creative.

Graphite pencils range from 9H, which is very black, to 9H, which makes a very dark gray line. Many artists use just one or two soft pencils (6B and 2B) and obtain the required shades of gray by alternating the pressure on the pencil. Even though this can produce a beautiful pencil rendering, try the use of a full gamut of grays.

When only using one or two pencils, you must lightly stroke the paper to achieve a light gray. This, however shows the grain of the paper and tells the world that it is a pencil drawing.

Use soft pencils (6B, 5B, 4B, 3B, 2B, B and HB) for black or dark areas and hard pencils (H, 2H, 3H, 4H, 5H, 6H, 7H, 8H, 9H) for light or white areas. With these, you can achieve photographic realism that requires viewers to ask how it was done.

HERE ARE two tips that will help you master the graphite pencil medium.

First, do your basic drawing on cheap layout paper. Here is where you do all the work and make all the mistakes.

Remember to look at your drawing in the mirror. The reversed image will show your mistakes faster than an art teacher. Then transfer your corrected and perfected drawing to a clean sheet of good, heavy drawing paper or two or three ply bristol board.

Second, don't rely on an outline to establish a shape or form. In reality, there are no black outlines to define shapes and forms. You see objects because they are of a color, shape or texture different from your surroundings.

In graphite, you are working only in shades of gray, so use shades of gray contrasting against each other rather than defining every shape with lines.

If you do this, you will be pleased at how realistic your work will become. More than any other medium, people will put their nose right up to the artwork, look and ask what medium it is. Dulling or mat spray gives the artwork such a finished look that often people will mistake it for a print.

Doll auction geared for enthusiasts

Baby doll Jason is shown with Heather (right) and Jennifer. The trio is part of Yolanda Bello's "Picture Perfect Babies" collection and are the focal point of a baby doll lookalike contest being sponsored by Georgia's Gift Gallery, in connection with the the doll auction Sunday, April 22, in the Plymouth Cultural Center.

Thirty modern dolls valued at more than $7,000 will be auctioned off at 1 p.m. Sunday, April 22, in the Plymouth Cultural Center — but that's only half of the story.

The other half will center on a doll look-alike competition open to area residents with the judging by celebrated doll artist Yolanda Bello.

The live auction is being sponsored by International Doll Exhibitions and Auctions Ltd., an organization that specializes in the sale of contemporary dolls, and Georgia's Gift Gallery, a Plymouth collectibles shop.

Baby, celebrity, fashion, character and musical dolls will be among the lots available for bidding. Estimated bids for individual dolls range from $50 to $1,000.

THE DOLL EXPECTED to realize the highest price is "Jason," a porcelain infant boy dressed in a powder blue clown outfit. Designed by Bello, the doll was the first issue in "Yolanda's Picture-Perfect Babies" collection, an award-winning series marketed by the Ashton-Drake Galleries.

Produced in a limited-edition, the baby doll is no longer being made and is only available on the secondary market through another collector or dealer willing to sell. Originally issued in 1986 for $48, a "Jason" doll recently sold for $1,150 at an auction in Baltimore, Md.

Dolls will be on display at the Cultural Center for inspection by bidders from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Bidding numbers for 250 will be available on a first-some, first-served basis. Limited spectator seating will also be available.

The live auction is just one facet of an all-day special event expected to draw hundreds of doll enthusiasts and collectors. Registration for the baby doll look-alike contest of costumed children resembling dolls Jason, Heather and Jennifer will take place from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. with the winners being chosen by Bello at 3 p.m.

Winners will receive Jessica dolls, the number seven doll in the "Picture Perfect Babies' collection. Anyone interested in entering the doll lookalike contest can stop in at Georgia's Gift Gallery, 575 Forest Ave., Plymouth for photo reproductions of the three dolls.

Think spring — think tomatoes

Earl Aronson

Are you hungry for luscious ripe tomatoes?

Cold weather hurt much of Florida's winter tomatoes — which usually satisfy the appetites of Northerners and Southerners for juicy, ripe fruit — and scarcity forced prices upward.

Good advice for those yearning for vine-ripened tomatoes is to plant some of your own this gardening season.

There are many varieties from which to choose. Some are more disease-free than others, and seed catalogs indicate the number of days from planting to maturity.

There are varieties better suited to patio gardens than others. For the home gardener without special planting and lighting facilities, transplants (seedlings) generally will produce fruit faster and more easily than starting seeds.

TOMATOES — SOME more acid than others, some tiny and suitable whole for salads, others preferable for slicing — are the most popular item in many home gardens. Some varieties will ripen all at once (determinate), while others (indeterminate), produce fruit over a longer period and are good for small families who want to enjoy tomatoes for a longer ripening period.

We get good results using 5-10-5 fertilizer. Other gardeners recommend other formulations, such as 6-6-6. Tomatoes in the garden like some compost added to the soil — some peat moss, vermiculite and aged manure.

Try a few plants in containers with a prepared potting mix, and feed plants with a liquid or granular fertilizer after planting.

Some tomatoes do well in hot climates. Check seed catalogs, your agricultural extension service or seed store for the variety recommended for your area and soil type.

SEVERAL YEARS AGO, I visited Southern Florida growers who had vast acreage and wanted to expand. This year, they suffered from the cold, and some lost nearly all their winter crops.

Seed and plant catalogs offer early, midseason, main season, big beefsteak, pasta, yellow stuffer and cherry varieties of tomatoes. Maturity times range from 52 days for Park Seed's Quick Pick and 55 days for the popular Early Girl to 72 days for Better Bush. Maturity times vary in different regions and climates.

Torri McCubbin, garden columnist for the Orlando (Fla.) Sentinel, lists these 10 favorites, with their fruit size and maturing days:

Beefmaster, over 12 ounces, 80 days; Better Boy, 12-18 ounces, 70 days; Carnival, 7-8 ounces, 72 days; Celebrity, 7-8 ounces, 70 days; Champion, 10-12 ounces, 62 days;

Flora-Dade, 6-8 ounces, 77 days; Floramerica, 8-12 ounces, 75 days; Sun Coast, 7-8 ounces, 72 days; Sweet 100, 1 inch, 65 days; and Walter, 7-8 ounces, 75 days.

IF YOU BUY SEEDLINGS ready to plant, choose squat, sturdy plants rather than lanky, spindly ones.

McCubbin advises that "the tomato is one plant that can be set deeper in the soil than it grew in the seedling container or transplant pot. Immature roots, often noticed as white bumps, form all along the stems and, when placed in contact with the soil, spread out to grow a vigorous water- and nutrient-absorbing plant.

"It's a common practice to set the first set of leaves at ground level," he said. "This also helps lanky plants stand up in the soil."

Watch plant growth closely. Stake plants if they grow too tall. Spray if insects are present. A paper or cardboard collar will discourage cutworms.

"LOFTY CONTEMPORARY":
Soaring rooflines and sky-lites, large and open living areas, a gourmet's kitchen, upper master bedroom suite with jacuzzi bath, guest rooms or studies (as you choose), a ladder-loft at the third level, full basement, multiple-garage.
ANOTHER is brand-new, somewhat smaller, with first-floor master suite and finished areas in walk-out lower level, more woods and less water. Each is under $250K and share a cul-de-sac with Mother Nature and her critters. Around the corner from Lakelands and an easy hop to the Expressway and your own personal "rat-race".

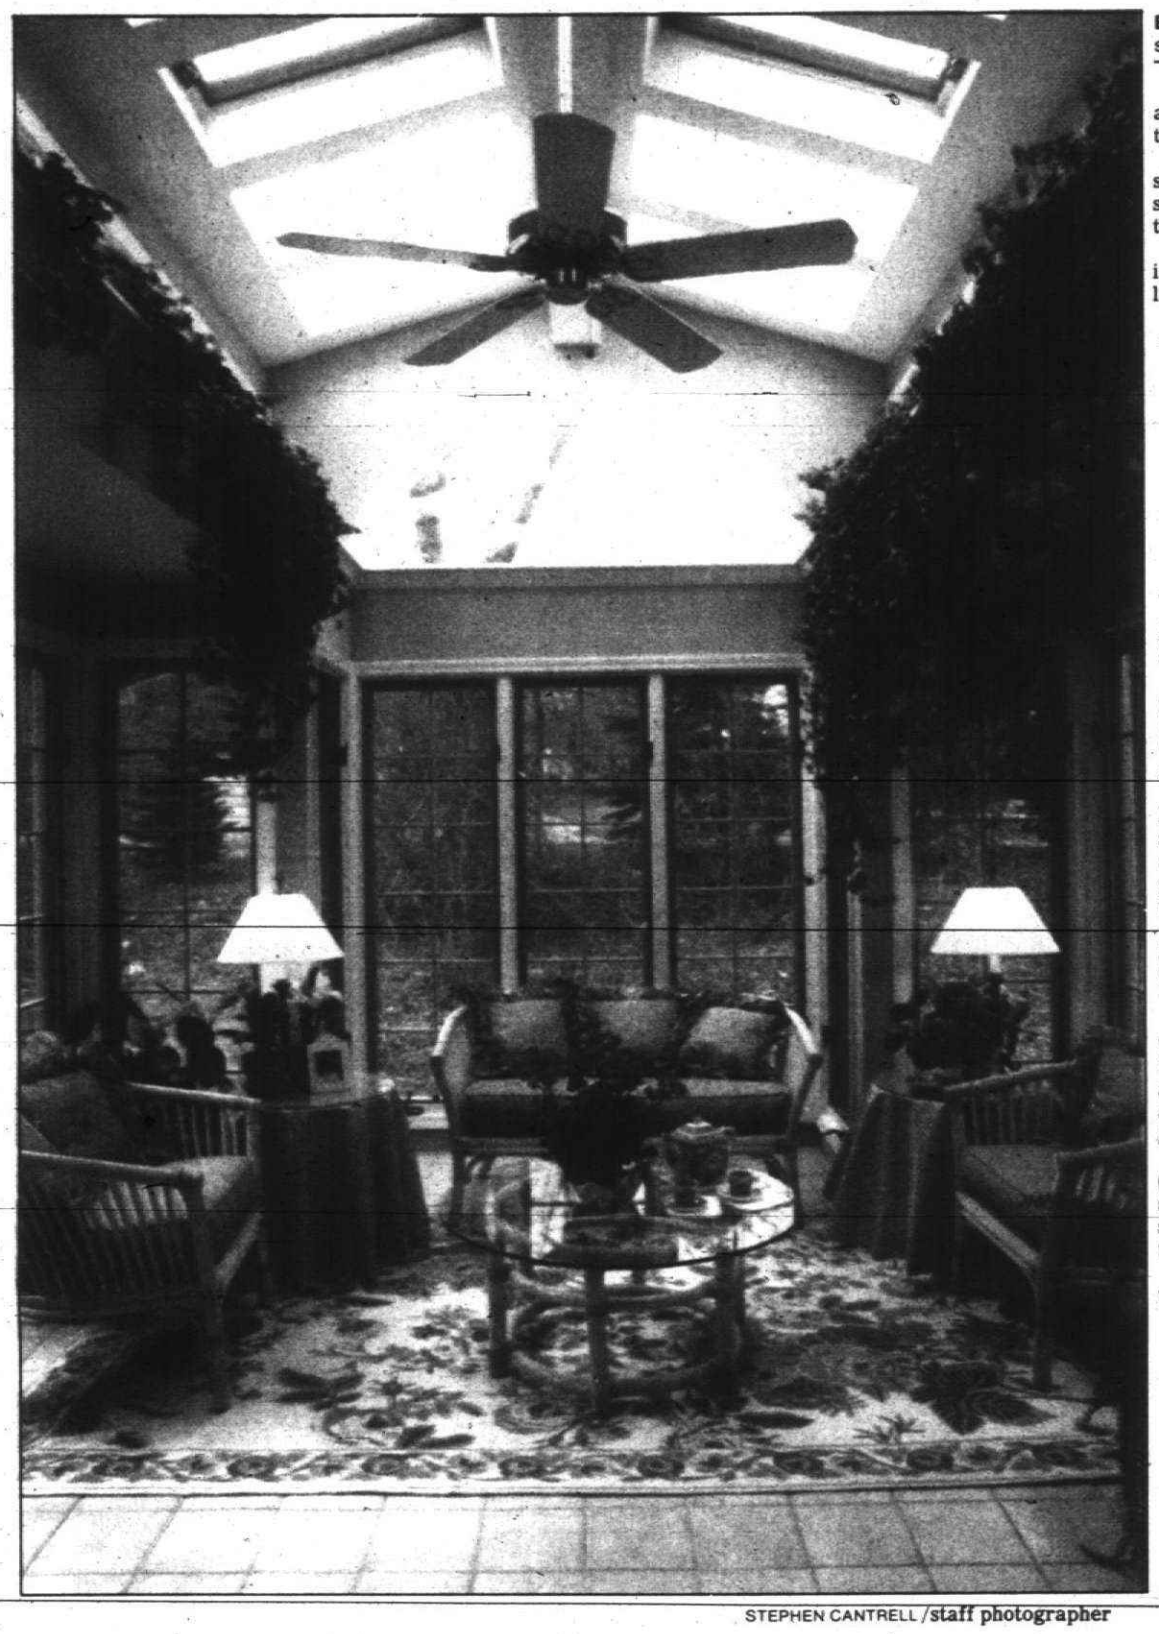
Skylights: Do they let sun in or let heat out?



STEPHEN CANTRELL/staff photographer

Lynn and Carol Merritt had 12 skylights built into the glass garden room of their Bloomfield Township home.

By Doug Funke
staff writer

There is another way to bring light and cheeriness into a house besides turning on a switch.

Some buyers are letting the sun shine in — not to mention the moon, stars and other delights of nature — through skylights.

"Light expands rooms, whether it's light coming through windows or light coming through skylights," said Robert R. Jones, president of a West Bloomfield building company.

'Light expands rooms, whether it's coming through windows or light coming through skylights.'
—Robert R. Jones, West Bloomfield builder

"We like them, the additional exposure to the exterior we get out of them," Jones added. "We think they're an architectural highlight to any home."

Don Frericks, president of Don Frericks Homes, also includes skylights in some of his models. "I would think in the last seven to eight years particularly they've become more popular," he said.

Gil Behling, president of Troy Building Products, supplies skylights to builders.

"IT SEEMS that people are trying to bring the outside in," Behling said. "Depending on how the house sits on a lot, a lot of light is missed in late afternoon or the early evening glow."

"The use of skylights in houses (nationally) has more than doubled since 1982," said Leslie Devore, spokeswoman for Velux, a skylight manufacturer.

A trade association reports that while 600,000 units were sold in 1982, 1.7 million are expected to be sold this year, Devore said.

Skylights will cost more than running shingles up the entire roof.

A simple 2-by-4 foot skylight can cost $250 to $400. Figure on another couple of hundred dollars per skylight for labor and finishing touches.

Better quality insulated glass and extras like skylights that can be opened, window treatments and automatic opening systems will boost the price even more.

"YOU CAN get into more expensive domes that can cost $3,000 to $4,000," Frericks said. "There's no limit on what you can spend if you want to do it."

Pella and Anderson are major manufacturers in addition to Velux.

People who think about getting skylights usually have two concerns — energy efficiency and potential water leakage.

Joseph Duran, Energy Craft Homes president, isn't a big fan of skylights.

"I try to avoid them," he said. "They're terrible. I'd rather see R-44 insulation than a piece of glass."

'I try to avoid them. They're terrible. I'd rather see R-44 insulation than a piece of glass.'
—Joseph Duran, president, Energy Craft Homes

Duran, who installs skylights if customers insist, will try for a southern exposure placement to get the most out of the sun and passive solar energy.

Duran figures that a 16-square-foot skylight will add about $32 a season to the heating bill.

THAT MIGHT not seem like much when buyers will pay a couple hundred thousand dollars for new houses. But Duran argues that $32 saved here, $32 there and $32 somewhere else adds up.

Others in the business agree that there's more heat loss with a skylight than an unbroken, shingled roof.

"You're defintely going to lose heat just like a glass window," Frericks said.

"You're dealing with an insulated fixture, not 22 inches of insulation," Behling said. "So you're going to have some heat loss, but not as much as 15 years ago."

"In the last five years products have improved tremendously by manufacturers," said Jones.

Jill Deacon, a sales representative for builder Larry Baker, said her highest heating bill this winter was $98 for a 3,600-square-foot house with five skylights.

As for avoiding leakage, it's all in the installation, builders maintain.

"WE'RE HEAVILY focused so we don't have leaks. We're very respectful of them (skylights)," Jones said.

"I'm on the roof myself," Duran said. "I refuse to be called back. The only way to avoid it is to be involved."

What some people perceive as a leak may just be condensation with houses being built so airtight today, said Keith Seefeldt, manager of Benson's Oakland Wholesale.

Homeowners who have skylights speak highly of them.

Lynn and Carol Merritt had 12 skylights built into the glass garden room of their Bloomfield Township home.

"My husband and I are both from Texas and we just moved here from California," Carol said. "We're outside people. We enjoy the patio lifestyle.

"Since we're confined indoors so long with the length of the cold season, we thought we'd extend our patio season," she said.

Gardens need attention, not big lots

From Midwest Living For AP Newsfeatures

These days it's not quite the same when Dean Grewell climbs behind the wheel of his John Deere tractor.

The 700 acres he once farmed have shrunk to a 125 by 165 foot lot, and his John Deere is a miniature version of the one he plowed and planted with. But that hasn't stopped this Iowian from raising bumper crops in his suburban West Des Moines backyard garden.

Grewell's garden thrives in terraces build up alongside his backyard fence and in 6 by 6 foot raised beds.

MIDWEST LIVING magazine reports that novice gardeners can cultivate bumper crops in small spaces, too. Grewell advises:

- Plant corn about 10 inches apart (two kernels per hill and pull the weaker plant later) in a row.

Grewell staggers plantings over a six-week period through the end of June; then, he fertilizes with 10-10-10 every three weeks after the corn stands a foot tall. When he picks the ears, Grewell cuts off the stalks so they don't continue to rob other corn plants of water and nutrients.

- For continuous production in a plot, Grewell plants cool-season crops (such as spinach, peas, leaf lettuce, radishes) with later-maturing crops (beans, carrots, cucumbers). Gardeners can even replace long-season crops in late summer with radishes and lettuce.
- RAISED BEDS dry out faster, so instead of hauling a hose from bed to bed, Grewell strings a drip-irrigation hose through the garden. He gives his bed about 1 ¼ inches of water a week.
- To save space, grow vining plants, such as cucumbers or melons, on trellises.

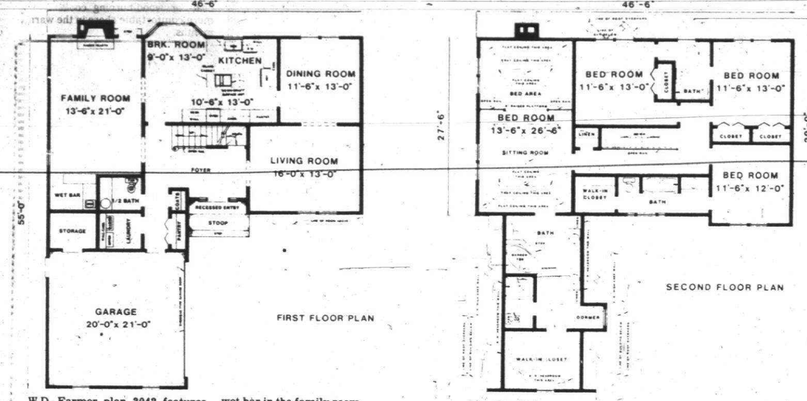
Plan provides for bedroom suite



W.D. Farmer plan 3042 features over 700 square feet of living space in the master bedroom suite.

The suite includes a full sitting area, bed area, private bath, trey ceilings and a large walk-in closet.

There also are three other bedrooms on the second floor. Two of them share a connecting bath, while the other has a private bath.

The first floor features separate rooms for everything: a formal living and dining room, a large kitchen with island surface unit and bay window breakfast room, a half bath, separate laundry, extra closets and a wet bar in the family room.

The traditional style is appointed by a soaring roof design, cantilevered bedroom, dormer windows and recessed entry. The home is well suited to a narrow lot.

This is a computer generated plan. It includes 3,044 square feet of heated area.

All W.D. Farmer plans include special construction details for energy efficiency and area drawn to meet FHA and VA requirements.

For more information, write to W.D. Farmer, P.O. Box 450025, Atlanta, GA 30345.

Skylights: pros and cons

"The real fun part is it can be snow covered outside and you can sit in here and it's just lovely."

Skylights are especially popular in family rooms, bedrooms and increasingly in kitchens and interior bathroom suites that have no windows.

"I think they've added zest to homes," said Frank Rodriguez, who is building a house in White Lake Township with six skylights — one in each of two bedrooms, two in the great room, one in the kitchen and one in the master bathroom.

The only drawback to skylights that occurred to Rodriguez — keeping them clean.

Builders want both convenience and authenticity

(AP) Many old-house restorers stop their restoration efforts when they reach the kitchen. They just don't want to sacrifice the conveniences of today for the sake of authenticity.

As far as modern appliances go, such as refrigerators and dishwashers, there's not much you can do to get a period look short of disguising them with wood panels.

The stove, however, is a different story.

Restored antique kitchen stoves are sturdy appliances that work remarkably well. One of these old beauties is sure to become the focal point of your room, and, together with the right combination of period features, will give your kitchen the unmistakable feel of years past.

Some of you may remember the glowing cast-iron range that warmed your grandmother's kitchen. Many of these old stoves had six top burners over a wood- or coal-powered oven, with an open high shelf or warming oven overhead. Often, a hot-water reservoir sat on the righthand side, keeping warm water handy for dish washing and other tasks.

THE DUAL functions these stoves served in years past — both to cook and help heat the home — were again realized by conscientious restorers in the energy crunching 1970s.

Although you can still find some restoration shops willing to make a new reproduction wood or coal range from patterns they own, it's usually cheaper to buy a restored original.

Since the firebox setup varies from stove to stove, the first thing you need to know before buying one is what your primary source of fuel will be. This largely depends on your location and what is abundant there.

A wood burning firebox is usually longer than one that is used for coal. There may be an extension in the back of the stove allowing pieces as long as 22 inches to be burned. The lining of the firebox is generally a thin, ¼-inch cast iron.

Since coal burns hotter than wood, a thick lining of fireclay (usually at least 1 to 1 ½-inches thick) is necessary in the firebox. Because of this, the firebox is smaller, generally around 14 to 15 inches.

Although the warmth these stoves generate is a welcome addition in the cold winter months, no one wants to heat the kitchen unnecessarily in the summertime. Thus, the two-season, or gas side, stove was born.

Often replacing the water reservoir or shelf on the side of the stove, a gas side attachment usually consists of three or four burners, an oven and a broiler.

Considered a retrofit item years ago, a gas side makes cooking on a coal- or wood-burning cookstove a more comfortable chore in the warm months.

Mold, mildew not too unusual in new homes

(AP) I recently moved to a newer house and found the basement was damp. I was able to dry things out by running a dehumidifier for a few days. The problem I have is that mold keeps forming on the floor. How can I clean it off and prevent it from forming again?

Mold and mildew spores are always present in the air and thrive in damp locations. A mold buildup is not very unusual in a new house due to the initial high moisture content of the building materials, which eventually dry out.

To address your problem, clean mold and mildew from concrete and tiled floors and walls with a solution of ½ to 1 cup of household bleach to one gallon of water. Rinse with clear water, then dry. Wear gloves and avoid skin contact while cleaning.

Also, keep the dehumidifier running to reduce further moisture buildup.

Our garbage disposal can't drain the dishwasher discharge fast enough so there's a momentary backup into the sink. The disposal works fine when used alone, with no backup. The plumbing downstream has been checked and the sink trap replaced. The drain lines appear to be clear. Is it possible to have a partial blockage of the disposal? If so, how is it cleaned out?

Sounds like you have some sort of blockage in the drain system. The disposer itself has no way of holding any water so that is most likely not your problem.

To check this, disconnect the power to the disposer, then disconnect the trap.

Look into the disposer's discharge port to make sure it's all clear. Then, with a bucket under the garbage disposer, pour some water through it to make sure it flows freely. Reconnect the drain trap and the electrical power.

If the garbage disposer appears to be clear, have a plumber or sewer cleaning company auger out your drain system.

Be sure they use a motor-driven auger type clean head tool and not a hand snake. A snake will puncture a hole in the obstruction but it will not actually clean the insides of the pipe as well as an auger would.

We will be installing a new sink in our bathroom that, according to a plumber friend of mine, will need to be vented with a new vent line. We've both sized up the situation and agree that running the new line through the existing walls will be a very difficult job entailing major demolition and reconstruction. Is there any alternative to venting the sink without this major construction project?

You may be able to use a ventless or antisiphoning, valve. This valve opens automatically to admit air, which prevents water from being siphoned from the trap, then closes to block the escape of sewer gas.

The valve installs behind the trap and solvent-welds to 1 ½-inch diameter plastic pipe. It can be joined to the same diameter metal pipe if its solvent-weld adapter is discarded. Although the valve meets national plumbing code requirements, it may not meet local standards.

Check before you install it. The valve sells for about $5 at hardware stores and home centers.

(For further information on any home problem, write to Popular Mechanics, Readers Service Bureau, 224 West 57th Street, New York, NY 10019. Phone: 212-649-3127.)

Links openings on upswing

(AP) Golf course construction in the United States reached a 16-year high in 1989, according to a recent report of the National Golf Foundation.

The report said 290 courses opened for play last year. That was a 37 percent increase over the 1988 total of 211 courses, the previous high for the decade.

Florida led all states with 50 new courses in 1989. Michigan was second with 19, and South Carolina and North Carolina tied for third with 14.

Florida also was first with 46 courses under construction. California was second with 31.
