Canton shoots down proposal to buy airport

By Diane Gale
staff writer

The Canton board of trustees Wednesday shot down a plan to buy Mettetal Airport.

Trustees Bob Shefferly, Phil LaJoy, Clerk Loren Bennett, Treasurer Gerald Brown and Supervisor Tom Yack voted against the township buying the airport. Trustees Elaine Kirchgatter and John Prenizcky voted against severing all ties with the proposal of the township possibly buying the airport.

Shefferly said he couldn't support a plan that could lock the township into operating an airport for 20 years or longer. It's a "no-win situation" for residents, he said.

"You can't make money that would go into the (township's) general fund, because the money has to go back into the airport," Shefferly said. "On the other hand, if money is lost it has to come out of the general fund. That bothers me a great deal."

A petition signed by 1,100 Canton residents instructed the board of trustees against the purchase and use of tax dollars to buy or operate the airport, on Joy and Lilley roads.

If Canton bought the airport, the township would probably pay 5 percent of the cost and operation. The remaining would be covered by state and federal grants, which are paid from aviation user fees. The grants are only available to public bodies and wouldn't be offered to the current private owners, the Klochko family.

The township would be responsible for maintenance and insurance costs.

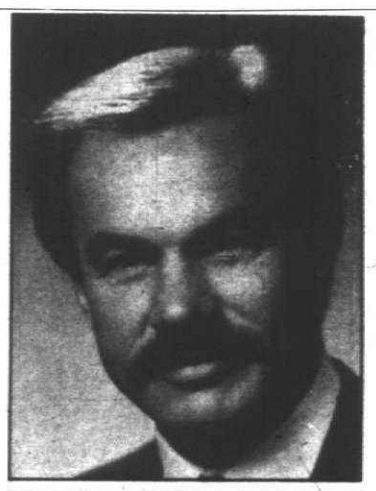

The Michigan Aeronautics Commission said there was a chance the state would pick up Canton's 5 percent purchase costs.

Kosteva wins big; turnout is small

The Republican stronghold in Canton was reinforced again in the 37th District state representative primary race Tuesday.

Although State Rep. James A. Kosteva, D-Canton, won the primary race against his Democratic opponent, Robert Bell, of Romulus he earned fewer votes in Canton than his Republican challenger Dolores Carmichael, also of Romulus.

Carmichael was unchallenged on the Republican ticket and will face Kosteva in the November general election.

"I'm simply pleased," Kosteva said about the race against Bell, a follower of Lyndon A. LaRouche, who advocates unconventional solutions to problems ranging from satanism to AIDS.

"And I'm grateful that people recognized the discernible difference between me and Mr. Bell," Kosteva said.

Districtwide Kosteva earned 2,363 votes; Bell got 441 votes; and Carmichael won 1,899 votes.

HOWEVER, IN Canton Carmichael received more support, with 299 votes, than Kosteva, who received 198 votes. Bell total was 41 votes in the township.

Of the 34,134 registered voters in Canton, only 3,024 residents went to the polls for the primary election.

Kosteva promised to run a tough campaign against Carmichael in November.

During his three terms in Lansing Kosteva has worked most on environment and education issues. He chairs the House Colleges and Universities committee.

KOSTEVA'S DEMOCRATIC opponent Bell, 70, a retired city of Detroit painter identified himself as a follower of LaRouche.

"I didn't really expect to win, so I didn't I guess," Bell said. "I congratulate my opponent and offer any help I can, if he needs it. I'm too new in the neighborhood and not known well enough.

"I don't think I will run again," Bell said.

Carmichael, 54, said she decided to run for the state House seat, because Kosteva was unresponsive to a problem she had with selling property.

"I intend to run a pretty hard campaign," Kosteva said. "I think it's important that legislators be held accountable every two years and to defend our record.

"I'm prepared to do that," he said.

Iraqi invasion hurts Canton development

By Diane Gale
staff writer

The outcome of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait will help determine who occupies a warehouse/distribution center under construction along the developing strips of land bordering I-275 in Canton.

The economy will play an important role in what happens to the building on 108,162 square feet in the 275 Commerce Center, a project by Troy based Kirco Realty Development, Ltd. The new building is expected to open by the end of the year.

WHEN ASKED earlier this week who would be a likely tenant, Douglas Winkworth, Kirco vice-president of development said, "Tell me what's going on in Kuwait."

He added, however, that "basically we're looking at a stable economy." He said Kirco, which has development projects in Michigan, Ohio, Colorado and the Carolinas, has experienced "steady tenant occupancy."

The building is among a growing number of new companies dotting the expressway in Canton. And the economy will dictate further projects, developers say.

The biggest draw to the 275 Commerce Center is its location bordered by I-275 on the east, Haggerty Road on the west and Ford

Canton officials have approved the building of Builder's Square and the Olive Garden restaurant.

The restaurant will be in a 9,098 square-foot building and is expected to be open for business by the second week in November.

Builders Square will occupy 80,800 square feet and is targeted to open after the Olive Garden.

A road will also be built from Haggerty to the back of the site, which will have a single parking lot for both the restaurant and hardware store, township officials said. The road is expected eventually to run all the way from Lilley to Haggerty.

Officials from the development company, Weatherford Walker, said the company had no comment about the project.

Schools want input on future course of education in district

By M.B. Dillon
staff writer

Plymouth-Canton school board members and administrators want the community's help to prepare students to compete in the next century.

They're organizing a committee whose job it'll be to develop a view of education for the year 2010, and to determine present and future needs for facilities and equipment.

The expected outcome is a recommendation to go to voters with a bond proposal to pay for new schools, capital improvements and educational materials.

It'll be left to the committee to determine whether and when to place a proposal on the ballot. Speculation had centered on a date of June, 1991 and a bond request in the neighborhood of $50 million.

The district sees before it "an educational task of unparalleled proportions," administrators say.

"We are in the midst of an information explosion where the world's knowledge is now doubling about every 20 months.

"This impacts on how schools will prepare their students for college and/or the workplace. It points to the need to teach students how to reason and how to find information rather than to rely on the rote memory education of the past."

Computer literacy will be a must if students are to compete at a global level, they add. "We have a need to adopt a vision and focus on the future if we are to perform tomorrow as we have yesterday and today in Plymouth-Canton Community Schools."

Right now, to bring class sizes down to 25 and under for K-3 and to 28 and under for the rest of the elementary grades would require 23 additional classrooms, or an entire school, said Superintendent John Hoben.

Because of demographic shifts and the age of several of the district's school buildings, there's a need for "con-

11th District Wayne County Commission GOP Primary:

Victor Gustafson	2,487
Linda Chuhran	1,662

Party ties help Gustafson carry primary

By Wayne Peal
staff writer

It will be Victor Gustafson vs. Milton Mack in this fall's 11th District Wayne County Commission race.

Taking roughly 60 percent of the vote, Gustafson defeated Linda Chuhran, 2,487-1,662, in Tuesday's Republican Party primary. Both are Canton residents.

Incumbent Mack, D-Wayne, drew 3,574 votes running unopposed in his party's primary.

Canton was expected to prove the key battleground in the GOP race and Gustafson outpolled Chuhran, 1,215-502, on their home turf.

Gustafson is vice chairman of the township planning commission. Chuhran is a former township clerk.

Gustafson, a GOP activist and recent GOP precinct delegate, counted on his party ties to carry him to victory.

WHILE CANTON is its largest community, the 11th District extends as far south as Sumpter Township and as far east as Rockwood. It includes Metropolitan Airport, most county landfills and the last relatively undeveloped land parcels in Michigan's most urbanized county.

Both GOP candidates stressed the need for economic development and differed little on other issues.

Gustafson is president of North American Marketing and Consulting, a sportswear marketing firm. He is association president for the township's Sunflower subdivision and helped form the Canton Homeowners Advisory Council, an umbrella organization for all subdivision groups.

siderable maintenance, remodelling and new construction," according to administrators.

At a workshop Monday, board members debated the feasibility of putting a bond proposal on the ballot next June.

"I don't think it's realistic to shoot for June," said Trustee Les Walker.

Agreed Board President Dean Swartzwelter: "Some of these goals look awfully ambitious. They scare me. My gut feeling is that to really get it right, it'll take more like two years."

"There's nothing magic about June, 1991," said Hoben. "The best time for a bond is August. Whether we can be ready by then, I don't know."

The school district successfully passed a $13 million bond issue in 1986. Trustee Roland Thomas said, "Part of the success of the 1986 bond issue was making sure there was something in it for everyone. When there isn't, it's a lot more difficult to sell. That's a political reality, whether we like it or not."

Hoben said community involvement is crucial.

"I think you need input from staff, citizens and the outside. After all, it's their schools. It's up to them to decide what they want in 2010. Do they want to be on the cutting edge?"

Communication is "one thing we haven't talked about," said Trustee Les Walker. "A board resolution would be a nice way to do that and start the process in earnest."

After hearing from everyone on the board, with the exception of Dr. E.J. McClendon who was absent, Swartzwelter said, "the board's general consensus, as I read it, is that it's so important to the district, so much is at stake, and it's so important that we have a process that administration, the board and citizens are comfortable with, we don't want to do anything to jeopardize that."

The board agreed to select eight people to work on subcommittees that will look at new facilities, existing facilities and educational trends. With input from the Barton Malow Co., which will serve as technical consultant, and community relations director Richard Egli, who will act as facilitator, the group will choose two people to be steering committee chairpersons.

Sub-committees representing elementary, middle and high schools will be included, and the superintendent's executive cabinet will serve as ex-officio members.

Road on the north. Easy access to I-275 and other freeways, as well as Metropolitan Airport, are other drawing cards to land near I-275, developers say.

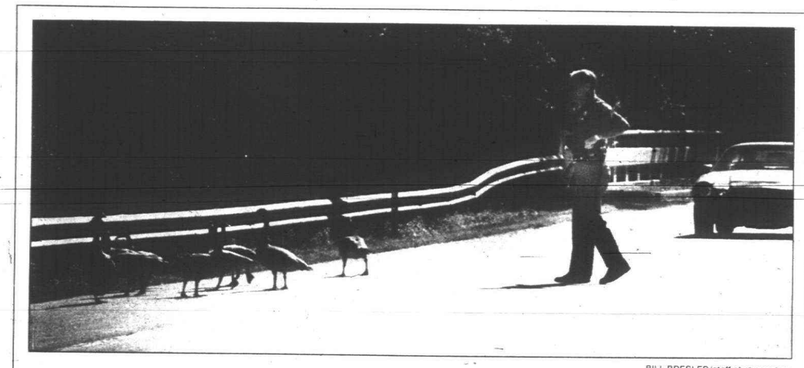

The new Kirco building joins Allstate Claims Center and American Yazaki, which was the biggest development that changed the scenery along I-275 in Canton.

Two more light industrial businesses, one on six acres and the other on two acres, also will be built in the Commerce Center. A wooded area that surrounds the center is a major drawing card to the center, Winkworth said.

"Everyone likes to go to work in a nice place," Winkworth said. "We go out of our way to maintain the environment. It helps us differentiate ourselves from a market that is otherwise very common."

THE OPEN space and "FOR SALE" signs that once dominated the scenery along I-275 in Canton are being replaced with businesses like, Toys 'R Us and Meer Dental. The land is zoned light industrial. When asked why Canton was chosen to locate the Comerce Center, Winkworth said, "It's an important market segment and under serviced right now with good quality buildings along I-275. We think there's a need out there that really isn't being addressed."

Currently there's a shortage in warehouse distribution, he added.

volved in an authority, joined by other communities, and jointly operate the airport? Kirchgatter asked.

The board also rejected a proposal formally instructing Yack to welcome proposals by other communites to form the authority. Kirchgatter and Prenizcky were in favor.

The board of trustees meeting Wednesday ended a four-month study by a committee of 10 people. Six members of the committee recommended that the board apply for 100 percent state and federal funding and hire a consultant, at no more than $2,500, to outline the good and bad of the purchase.

The board rejected the committee recommendation.

Brown said township officials can "play with this for two years a study and restudy."

Kirchgatter countered that the township has "been known to hire professionals whether it's a traffic, recreation, or social services issue."

"This is no different," she said. "It's not a lot of money."

The decision came as a disappointment to state and federal aviation officials, local pilots and other airport supporters in the administration meeting room.

John Vergona, a Canton pilot and vocal advocate of the airport, questioned the reliability of the study committee, saying that one member, James Darling, was professionally involved with the Mueller family, which operates another airport.

The Muellers said publicly they are against the township buying Mettetal.

Muzzle-loaders in club aiming to please

By M.B. Dillon
staff writer

If on Labor Day weekend you happen to saunter onto a certain plot of ground in the westernmost corner of Plymouth Township, you might be fooled for a minute into thinking you've been swept two centuries back in time.

Replete with their buckskins, moccasins and muzzle-loaders, folks from all over the country will gather for the 11th Annual Black Powder Rendezvous at the Western Wayne Conservation Association's 87-acre facility, off Napier north of North Territorial Road.

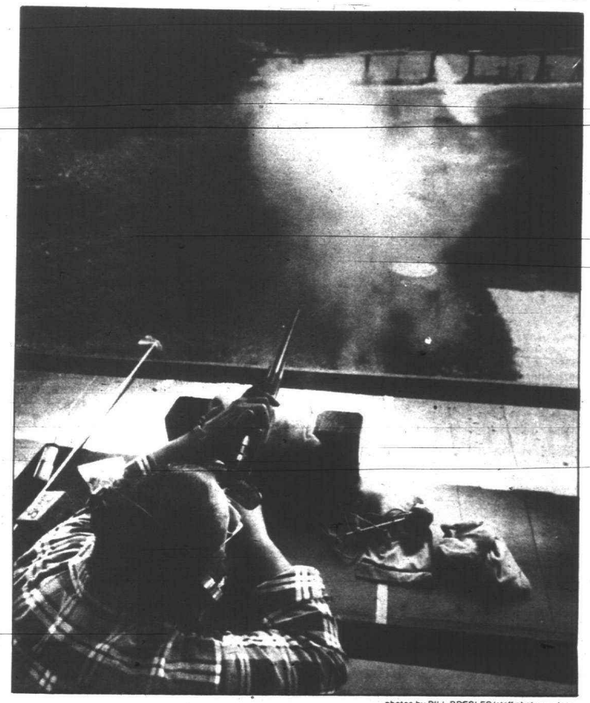

New arrivals will sign in at a log-and-canvas registration booth, as a giant iron kettle of bean soup simmers on an open fire. Would-be Minute Men and their families will pitch teepees, tents and lean-tos and build fires. There will be encampments for 125, including a blacksmith.

Should someone make the mistake of trying to camp in their RV, they and their "tin teepees" will be cast out to the parking lot, says WWCA President Bob Laich.

Once a metal silhouette of a rabbit is built, shooting competition will get under way.

There will be tomahawk and knife-throwing contests, and a cast-iron skillet-throw for the ladies. Others will try their luck with cross-cut saws in log-sawing competition.

Prizes will include turkeys, chickens and hams.

Black powder purists may scoff at Bill Kocher's updated version of a muzzle loader, but he claims it's more accurate.

The WWCA hosted the Midwest Regional Air Rifle Championships last month, drawing competitors from Florida, California, Georgia, Indiana and Michigan.

In September at the Western Beef Cook-Out, a country band will entertain as 300 pounds of beef simmer on an open spit.

Every February, more than 200 wild game lovers assemble at the WCCA to sample venison, elk, moose, and other delicacies prepared by four professional chefs and donated by the successful hunters among the the club's 1,000-plus members. The members hail from Plymouth, Canton, Garden City, Westland, Livonia, Northville, Brighton, South Lyon and Ann Arbor.

"It's no longer a wild game dinner — it's a gourmet meal," said Laich. "We sold out last year."

Special events crowd the calendar, but there's activity just about every day at the WWCA, which has a bar, meeting rooms and banquet facilities for 250 in a huge room lined with the head of moose, elk, bush buck, white-tailed gnu and other animals hunted in places as distant as South Africa.

Year-round, trap and skeet shooters practice and compete in fields now in the process of being rebuilt.

Shooters take aim at clay pigeons electrically propelled a distance of 50 yards at 81 mph.

There's a 25-50-yard bunker range, and a 100-yard range for rifle shooters. The WWCA also has facilities for archers and air riflers, instruction by certified teachers, and archery and a playground for children.

"We're real proud of this place," said Laich, who added that clubgoers range in age from 10 to 80 years old. "It's a family-oriented place where everyone can come out and have fun."

Greg Blagus of Plymouth and Debbie Moore of Dearborn were out shooting Monday.

"I took it up because hunting season isn't all year," said Blagus, shotgun chairman and the overseer of the association's league. "It's no different than someone who likes to play pool or golf."

"I like to shoot; it's fun," said Moore.

"We're not just a shooting organization," added Laich.

For the past five years, the WWCA has taken part in the Rouge Rescue. On Arbor Day each spring, the club gives away pine saplings.

Founded in 1938 by 10 Wayne County outdoorsmen, the club is working with a DNR biologist to make the Johnson Creek, a Rouge tributary, a viable fishing stream. The WWCA also is working with Browning-Ferris to develop a 47-acre nature area in conjunction with a new recycling center north of Five Mile between Napier and Chubb.

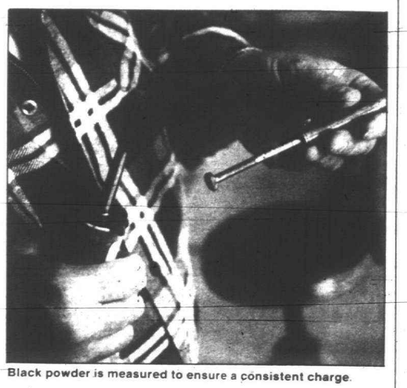

Laich hopes the nature center "will be a real asset for the whole community."

Members, who must be sponsored, are assessed a $75 initiation fee the first year. Dues are $65 annually.

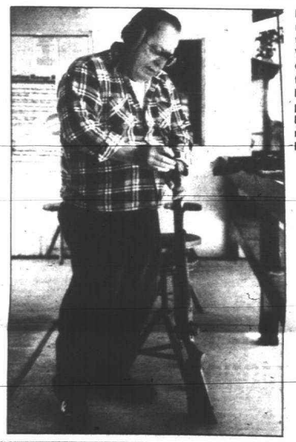

The WWCA, recognized by the National Wildlife Federation in 1986 as one of the nation's 25 outstanding clubs, is open to everyone.

"We have lady members and every race you can think of," Laich said.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays and Saturday, and from 10 a.m. until dusk, "whichever comes first," on Sunday.

Black powder is measured to ensure a consistent charge.

Plymouth cruising problem getting worse

By Kevin Brown
staff writer

The cruising problem last weekend was the worst yet this summer, city officials say.

And while they say they're hoping there won't be a repeat this weekend, they're preparing for one.

"We wrote 48 tickets Friday night alone, that's an incredible amount of tickets," said police Chief Richard Myers.

And while Myers and assistant City Manager Paul Sincock said their "mini-zone concept" is helping relieve jammed traffic on downtown streets during cruise-ins, Mayflower Hotel co-owner Creon Smith said, "I think what they need are more officers."

The noise generated last weekend from cruisers — mostly from loud radios and yelling — caused some Mayflower Hotel guests to check out early.

"They come to Plymouth for a quiet weekend," Smith said. "(The noise) doesn't make for a pleasant stay."

CRUISING-RELATED TRAFFIC was hurting some businesses,commissioner James Jabara said at the city commission meeting Monday.

"The eating establishments have had a bad time of it," he said.

Some friends traveling in a car downtown "couldn't go 15 or 20 feet without hearing vulgarities, or somebody swearing at them," commissioner John Vos said. "They won't be coming back to downtown Plymouth."

One commissioner raised the possibility of blocking off traffic coming into downtown. But Jabara said such an action "doesn't give you a good feeling about the city of Plymouth."

Police have also increased the presence of foot patrols downtown.

THE MINI-ZONE concept, used last weekend and at other times in the past three years, involves "various lane closures that will help ease the traffic flow in the event we have excessive volumes," Sincock said.

Smith commended Myers for trying to deal with the situation.

"I'm, sure they're trying to do everything they can, but it's not good enough.

"It's still a prominent problem. Even when it's at a low keel it's still a problem — I don't know what the answer is."

By using the mini-zone approach, "Essentially you empty the street (Main) and there's not a show there anymore," Sincock said.

CRUISING — WHICH usually involves dozens, even hundreds, of young people driving cars or walking around downtown Plymouth in the evening — was a popular pastime in the late 1950s and early '60s.

The activity picked up again in Plymouth five years ago.

Downtown cruising usually ends about the time school starts in September, officials said.

Survey shows support for death penalty

By Kevin Brown
staff writer

Most folks living in Rep. Gerald Law's state House district favor legal abortions, more state money for schools and the death penalty for those convicted of first-degree murder, according to a survey Law conducted.

The findings were compiled from 3,000 responses to a survey mailed to constituents in the 36th District, made up of Plymouth, part of Canton and Northville.

"I put it together," Law said of the survey. "I try and think of topics that people might be interested in, that will be before the legislature.

"It helps keep me current on opinions of 36th District residents, which in turn affects the way I represent them in Lansing," Law said.

For example, he said, the survey shows that 85 percent of the respondents favor a proposal requiring the state to spend all lottery profits plus 10 percent of the general fund budget on education.

"We may vote on that one," Law said, adding that he also favors such legislation, which is now before the House.

Another 68 percent "said they did not favor a law to make abortions illegal in all cases except rape and incest," Law said.

Law said he opposes abortion because of his religious beliefs.

The survey also showed that 68 percent of the respondents support legislation that would require a minor to obtain parental consent before having an abortion, he said.

About 80 percent favor the death penalty for murder, he said.

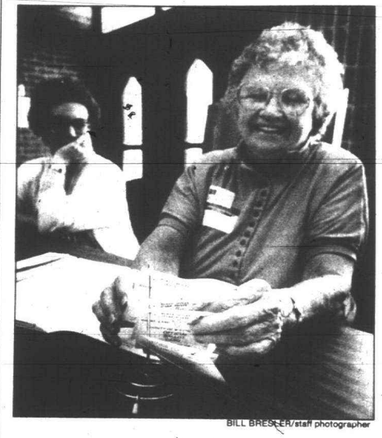

Other survey results showed:

- Ninety percent approve of court-ordered wiretapping by the Michigan State Police in the war on drugs.
- Fifty-two percent say employers should have the right to test employees for drugs in jobs involving the public safety.
- More than 90 percent favor building more prisons rather than reduced sentences for felons, if prisons are crowded.
- Eighty-eight percent said their property taxes are too high.

Bill Schuette's state campaign headquarters is a suite of offices in Livonia. His victory party was across the driveway in the Livonia Marriott ballroom. Schuette claimed a 54-46 percent victory over Clark Durant in Tuesday's GOP primary.

Local volunteers aid Schuette victory

By Tim Richard
staff writer

A farm area congressman put Livonia and western Wayne County on the state political map this week.

The Bill Schuette for Senate state campaign headquarters is a suite of offices at 17177 North Laurel Park Drive near the Six Mile intersection of I-275 in Livonia.

"This site is convenient to (Detroit Metropolitan) Airport, it's convenient to Lansing, and it's convenient to his home in Sanford," said an aide to the winner of Tuesday's cliffhanger Republican primary.

His victory party was across the driveway in the Livonia Marriott ballroom. Schuette claimed a 54-46 percent victory over Clark Durant at 11:30 p.m., 40 minutes later than scheduled.

PAST CAMPAIGNS of any magnitude for state office have been run out of suites in Lansing, downtown Detroit, Southfield and Troy. Until the early '80s, the Laurel Park site was a weed field.

"We cover the whole state from here," said the aide, Don Kraft, communications director. "We have a staff of 13 and lots of volunteers."

A room loaded with wall maps is for field operations — getting out the vote, making sure county offices have all the literature and lawn signs they can handle.

An adjoining room has computers — for letters, finances, accounting for contributions and expenses.

The staff is mainly young, like Schuette himself, who is 36.

"HERE COMES our star volunteer," Kraft sang out as Jack Tatigian walked into the office.

Tatigian, a Livonian, was congratulated for recruiting friends to work at the polls.

A first year law student at the University of Detroit, he ran for precinct delegate himself. The son of the city attorney, the young Tatigian insists, "I have no interest in politics. I believe in the war drugs" — particularly Schuette's tough stand.

MARIJANE THAYER, 22, whose Madonna College degree is in international business and economics, started this week on the Schuette staff writing press releases and doing research.

"I'm interested in many of his ideas," Thayer said of Schuette's efforts in problems of the aging, Medicare and drugs.

The anti-drug theme popped up many times in chats with the young staffers and volunteers, who fear many in their age group, in the United States and Europe, are succumbing to drugs.

Thayer, a former Livonian now living in Northville Township, inherited some political interest from her mother, who worked on local legislative campaigns.

But Jeff Schroder, 15, led his family into politics. The Northville High student led 20 Teen-Age Republicans (TARS) in stuffing envelopes and running errands.

"Bill Schuette really motivates us," said Schroder, who put in 40 to 60 hours a week on the campaign. A former Livonian, Schroder brought his father and grandparents to the victory party.

Numerically, the young faces overwhelmed the numbers of party regulars such as the staff of U.S. Rep. Carl Pursell, GOP national committeewoman Ronna Romney, attorney L. Brooks Patterson, Oakland politicos Jim Alexander and Joe Knollenberg, and Redford Township clerk Joan Reilly.

AS A CONGRESSMAN, Schuette serves on the Agriculture Committee, sought aid for his bean farmers and voted conservative on most other issues.

But Schuette the Senate candidate sees sees little difference between folks in different parts of the state, although he has "travelled the state for well over a year from the shores of Superior to the banks of Erie."

He stresses "basics" — the economy, taxes, spending, personal safety, drugs, education.

Voters approve county millage

Wayne County voters said yes to a 1-mill county tax renewal during Tuesday's primary voting.

County voters approved the renewal 98,968-82,437. A majority of voters in Livonia, Redford, Canton, Plymouth and Plymouth Township approved the renewal. A majority of voters in Westland and Garden City rejected it.

County voters approved the measure, 54.5 percent to 45.5 percent.

The vote in area communities was as follows:

- Canton — yes, 1,409; no, 1,339.
- Garden City — yes, 927; no, 1,190.
- Livonia — yes, 3,826; 3,050.
- Plymouth — yes, 522; no, 373.
- Plymouth Township — yes, 1,240; no 1,056.
- Redford — yes, 4,339; no, 2,772.
- Westland — yes, 2,511; no, 2,772.

The one-mill renewal translates to about $37.50 a year on a house with a market value of $75,000.

County officials had predicted dire times if the tax renewal had lost.

Losing the millage would have delayed opening of the new county jail, closed county parks, restricted county health care programs and forced layoffs for more than 400 county employees, county Executive Edward McNamara said.

The tax provides an estimated $24 million.

The county's overall tax levy is 8.07 mills. The figure includes 6.07 mills in non-voted operating taxes and 1 mill approved by voters in 1998 for a new county jail.

Cahalan, Campbell top judicial ballot

William Leo Cahalan Jr., a Detroit attorney, and Patricia Campbell, a referee with the Wayne County Probate Court, will face off in the November race for a new Wayne County probate court seat.

In unofficial vote totals from the Wayne County Elections Commission, Cahalan, son of the late Wayne County prosecutor and Circuit Court judge, received 37,217 votes. Campbell got 29,425 votes.

Other candidates in order of finish included Carolyn Blanchard of Northville, 26,518; Sean P. Kavanagh of Livonia, 26,407; Robert K. Costello of Detroit, 17,738 and Peter E. Bec of Plymouth, 4,706.

Cahalan, 32, is a Detroit-based attorney and former assistant Detroit Recorders Court law librarian. He is a graduate of the Detroit College of Law.

Campbell, 58, is a Detroit resident and has been an attorney for 15 years.

Plymouth man's words land in Congressional Record

BILL BRESLER/staff photographer

James Moyian: "It made me feel good."

It's not every day that a citizen's letter is read on the floor of the U. S. House of Representatives.

"It made me feel good," said James Moylan of Plymouth, a design supervisor at Ford Motor Co., whose July 25 letter was read into the Congressional Record.

"I was impressed that the letter was read and digested. It was a nice touch," he said. "It was nice to know they (representatives) go through the letters like a representative should."

U.S. Rep. Carl Pursell read the letter on the House floor on Tuesday. "In my opinion, the current guidelines for banks and credit unions do not need to be revamped," Moylan wrote.

"I can only recall the last time the government 'broadened' the guidelines of savings and loans for the 'betterment' of the saving public," Moylan continued.

'It was nice to know they (representatives) go through the letters like a representative should.' —James Moylan

Moylan, who belongs to the Dearborn Federal Credit Union, said, "The main point is the credit union system and its regulations are working right now. There's a low percentage of credit unions failing now."

He said regulations that allow credit unions to offer free checking and other services are "a good thing," because they are able to compete with competition to banks.

Moylan, who in the past has written letters to newspapers on sports subjects, said he gets kidded by friends because, "I say I'm going to write a letter," but doesn't.

He said this was his first letter to a congressman.

Pursell, who said he's read letters on the House floor from constituents earlier in his career in Congress, plans to read additional letters from constituents in the future.

"The people elect their representatives to speak for them," said Gary Cates, Pursell's press secretary.

Health care benefits urged for kids

Health care costs must be spread evenly among Michigan's public and private sectors if all citizens are to have affordable health insurance, according to state Rep. Gerald H. Law, R-Plymouth.

This is one of many conclusions of the House Republican Task Force on Affordable Health Care for the Uninsured, which has issued a report recommending a variety of options to provide adequate health care for all Michigan residents.

Inability to get proper care leads to chronic poor health, especially for people with diabetes, high blood pressure and respiratory illnesses, Law said.

Families without insurance also can face financial ruin even with one incident of hospitalization. The burden of catastrophic health care bills easily can overwhelm the assets of middle-class families, he said.

TASK FORCE recommendations include:

- enacting legislation allowing Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Michigan to establish a "Caring for Kids" program, which would serve approximately 254,000 state children. The program would be funded by public and private contributions and provide primary health care benefits to enrolled children at no cost to their families.
- passing legislation implementing a refundable tax credit to businesses and individuals sponsoring children in the "Caring for Kids" program.
- requiring Michigan health insurance carriers to offer policies for children and grandchildren.
- establishing incentives for physicians to provide charity care to the uninsured, such as protecting professionals from civil liability for providing free assistance to people not covered by health insurance or Medicaid.
- enacting legislation establishing a non-profit health insurance pool for small businesses and tax credits for businesses that participate in the pool.
- providing a credit against Michigan's single business tax for employers who finance a "Health Insurance Deductible Assistance Program."
- allowing the purchase of Medicaid health benefits by employed disabled adults, employed parents of disabled children, and unemployed injured workers.
- encouraging health insurance carriers to develop more insurance products that are diversified in coverage and less expensive to employers.

Michigan had an estimated 1.5 million uninsured people in 1987. This growing number creates a dilemma for many hospitals that face severe financial losses for uncompensated hospital service. Such unpaid care cost Michigan hospitals nearly $350 million in 1987, up from $221 million in 1984, according to the Michigan Hospital Association.

House Republicans already have introduced legislation to implement some of the task force's recommendations.

Botsford launches new care program

Being hospitalized is a stressful time for both patients and their families.

"It's a time of crisis," said the Rev. Kurt Stutz. "Illness is a threat to our lives, and many patients and families need emotional or spiritual support during that time."

Stutz, an ordained Lutheran minister, is the chaplain for Botsford General Hospital's newly established Pastoral Care Program.

The program is an interdenominational program, designed to help meet the spiritual and counseling needs of patients, families and staff. As chaplain, Stutz can provide pastoral services for people of all faiths.

"Through the pastoral care program, Botsford is recognizing that medical care does take into consideration the spiritual needs of the patients," Stutz said. "The program fits in well with the philosophy of osteopathic medicine to provide holistic health care for the patient."

According to Marilyn Kuncz, administrator of hospital services utilization at Botsford, the need for a formalized pastoral care program was expressed by both patients and families. Pastoral care has been provided in the past by visiting volunteer clergy. However, a more formalized program adds to Botsford's dimension of personal caring for all people within the hospital environment.

"The program will add a spiritual, holistic dimension of health care and expands the hospital's commitment to to patient care," Kuncz said. "These are essential elements and are critical to the healing process and to our quality of care."

THE ROLE of a chaplain, Stutz said, is not to explain, cure or eliminate disease, but to help the patient and family put suffering in perspective.

"We're trying to help patients find meaning and understanding in suffering. We help to foster patients' beliefs and understanding of their illness and suffering."

As chaplain for the program, Stutz will provide ongoing spiritual and pastoral counseling to patients, families and staff. "Our goal is to provide support and care to patients during very anxious times," he said. "People like to know they have some kind of support and know that somebody does care."

A pastoral care program has many benefits for both patients and the hospital, Kuncz said. A chaplains' intervention lessens stress and may reduce the length of stay for a patient. This ultimately leads to lower health care costs.

"In addition, it adds to Botsford's dimension of providing warm, personal and immediate attention to all people within the hospital environment," she said.

Botsford General Hospital is a 336-bed leading osteopathic teaching hospital serving Farmington Hills and surrounding communities. It is affiliated with Michigan State University College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Attorney was dedicated to clients

By Brad Emons
staff writer

Attorney Michael B. Stebbins, past president of the Livonia Bar Association, died early Saturday, Aug. 4, at home after a bout with cancer.

The Plymouth Township resident was 53.

"He was very dedicated, very hard working," said former law classmate John Spencer, a partner in the firm of Spencer and Stebbins in Livonia. "He often placed his client's interest above his own."

Services were Tuesday in St. Valentine Catholic Church, Redford, with burial in Holy Sepulchre Cemetery, Southfield.

He is survived by: wife, Ruth; daughters, Diane, Catherine; sons, Robert, Douglas, Matthew, David Hamway; mother, Adelaide; sisters Patricia Becker, Adelaide LaMonte.

MR. STEBBINS WAS born in 1937 in Flint.

He graduated from St. Matthew High in Flint before going on to obtain degrees at the University of Michigan and Detroit College of Law.

Stebbins served in the U.S. Marines Corps before becoming a member of the Michigan and Livonia bar associations.

He practiced law from 1968 through 1989. Stebbins also served as an arbiter for the American Arbitration Association.

HE WAS a member of the Livonia Elks Lodge, Westland Rotary Club, and Western Golf and Country Club (where he served as director and vice president).

Stebbins also served as head marshal for the NCAA Track and Field championships in Detroit.

Memorials should be sent to Angela Hospice and St. Jude Children's Hospital.

MARY E. HAUK

Services for Mary E. Hauk, 99, of Canton Township were Saturday, Aug. 4, at the Cherry Hill United Methodist Church. Burial was in Cherry Hill Cemetery, Canton.

Mrs. Hauk was born June 20, 1891, in Nankin Township. She died Wednesday, Aug. 1, in Westland. She came to the Canton community in 1919 from Nankin Township (now Garden City and Westland). GOP trio sues to block governor's veto

By Tim Richard
staff writer

Three state Senate Republicans have gone to court to fight Gov. James Blanchard's unusual use of a line item veto — to raise spending on the Youth Corps and classroom computers.

"The fiscal integrity of the state's appropriations process is in jeopardy," said Sen. Doug Cruce, R-Troy, chair of the appropriations subcommittee on regulatory agencies.

Cruce provided an exhibit in the Ingham County Circuit Court suit filed by appropriations chair Harry Gast of St. Joseph and vice chair Dan DeGrow of Port Huron.

"This puts school districts in a real quandary," said Garden City Schools superintendent Michael Wilmot, whose district applied for 10 computers under the state "Classrooms For Tomorrow" program. "Do you apply for something knowing you could get stiffed?"

The program promises state financing, Wilmot said, but would make local districts pay if the state rescinded its money.

Garden City's answer, he added, was to apply, "for items we would have only bought ourselves anyhow."

"I can't help but feel we got caught in politics," Wilmot said.

THE LEGISLATURE, in a supplemental budget measure called House Bill 5278, reduced spending in two key areas for the Blanchard administration.

Blanchard used the line item veto to eliminate the cuts.

The senators say it's an unconstitutional action because the constitution authorizes the executive to reduce spending levels but not to increase them. "He has leaped over the constitutional boundaries defining and separating the powers of the legislative and executive branch," said Gast.

The senators asked the court for a temporary restraining order against Blanchard's act.

THE ITEMS Blanchard vetoed are cuts of:

- $4 million for the Youth Corps, the nation's largest job training program. His act restores the budget to the $22.3 million in the original bill. Cruce has attacked the program as over-funded. Not all of last year's appropriation was spent, and there are more pressing state needs, Cruce argued. Blanchard says he intends to spend some of the current budget in the following fiscal year.
- $2 million to finance a bond issue for the purchase of more than 24,000 computers for public schools.

That program has become highly politicized, with Republicans on the State Board of Education accusing Blanchard of trying to take credit for it. Republicans fear Blanchard will try to use the new computers when school starts in September for political "media events."

In addition, Republicans say the computer appropriation should be delayed to ascertain (1) that school districts can fund their local shares and (2) that teachers are trained to use the new technology.

An economic cloud hangs over the debate. In Lansing there is talk — but no definitive reports — that the auto sales slump will reduce revenues to the point where the governor must make widespread spending cuts in the middle of the fiscal year. The fiscal year starts Oct. 1.

House sugar vote isn't sweet for consumers

Here's how Observer & Eccentric area members of Congress were recorded on major amendments to farm legislation under debate in the House and Senate in the week ending July 27. Both chambers were working to reauthorize federal farm programs for another five years.

HOUSE

SUGAR PRICE SUPPORTS — By a vote of 150 for and 271 against, the House rejected an amendment to lower from 18 cents to 16 cents per pound the level at which the government props up the price of domestic sugar. Although the program sets an artificially high price that works its way through to consumers, it operates at small cost to the Treasury. The vote occurred as the House debated a five-year extension to federal farm programs (HR 3950).

Supporter Jim Moody, R-Wis., said "the sugar program is a consumer program (providing) stable supplies of sugar at a solid, reasonable, predictable price."

A yes vote was to lower federal price supports and thus the market price of sugar. William Broomfield, R-Birmingham, voted yes.

Voting no were: Carl Pursell, R-Plymouth; Dennis Hertel, D-Harper Woods; William Ford, D-Taylor; and Sander Levin, D-Southfield.

TO ELIMINATE SUBSIDIES — By a vote of 159 for and 263 against, the House rejected a farm bill amendment to deny federal crop support payments to the nation's wealthiest farmers, those with adjusted gross incomes of $100,000 or more. The amendment would have reduced spending for loans, direct payments and other subsidies by $700 million annually. Some 20,000 individuals and 4,500 farm entities would have been denied payments under the amendment.

Supporter Bill Green, R-N.Y., asked: "Is it such a harsh thing to ask that people who are above $100,000 a year in income come off the dole?"

Opponent Neal Smith, D-Iowa, said the purpose of farm payments is not income maintenance but to stabilize supplies and prices for consumers.

A yes vote was to end taxpayer subsidies of the nation's wealthiest farmers.

Voting yes were: Hertel, Levin and Broomfield.

Against them were Ford and Pursell.

TO SAVE THE HONEY PROGRAM — By a vote of 178 for and 215 against, the House rejected an amendment to phase out the federal honey program over four years. This put the House treatment of honey in the new farm bill at odds with that of the Senate, which voted (below) to end the 51-year-old loan program that guarantees profits to about 2,000 beekeepers regardless of market conditions. The program cost $385 million during the past five years.

Sponsor Silvio Conte, R-Mass., called honey supports "the most ridiculous giveaway program to ever wriggle its way into the law books."

Opponent Glenn English, D-Okla., said the honey program "has provided great benefit to not only American agriculture but the American consumer."

A yes vote was to phase out the federal subsidy of beekeepers.

Area members Pursell, Ford, Levin and Broomfield voted yes. Hertel did not vote.

SENATE

SUGAR PROGRAM — By a vote of 54 for and 44 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to the new farm bill (S 2830) to reduce from 18 to 16 cents a pound the propped-up price domestic sugar growers are guaranteed under federal farm policy. The measure was virtually identical to the House sugar amendment (above).

Tabling supporter Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., said "every major sugar producing nation in the world provides some sort of economic incentive or protection to their domestic sugar producers."

Sponsor Bill Bradley, D-N.J., said "the sugar program is the S&L of agriculture policy. It is insured sugar deposits. There are no downsides here."

A yes vote opposed a cut in federal loan rate that sets the market price of sugar.

Both Michigan senators, Democrats Carl Levin and Donald Riegle, voted yes.

TO CHANGE PEANUT PROGRAM — By a vote of 57 for and 41 against, the Senate tabled (killed) a farm bill amendment to adopt a free-market system in place of the 51-year-old program that controls peanut production. By law, peanut growing for domestic markets is virtually the exclusive right of holders of federal quotas in seven states. The government further helps these producers by supporting the domestic price of peanuts at about half-again the world market price. Farmers lacking quotas can only sell abroad or for domestic meal and oil production. Critics acknowledge the program costs the government little but say it is expensive to consumers.

Howell Heflin, D-Ala., who voted to kill the amendment, said the program provides "American consumers with adequate supplies of excellent quality peanuts at very reasonable prices."

Amendment sponsor William Roth, R-Del., called it "hard to believe in this age of enlightenment there are laws on the books that protect feaudalism . . ."

A yes vote was to preserve the peanut program.

Riegle and Levin voted no.

THE HONEY PROGRAM — By a vote of 46 for and 52 against, the Senate refused to preserve the 51-year-od price support program for honey. This adopted a farm bill amendment to phase the program out over four years. Established in 1949, it uses non-recourse loans to guarantee the incomes of approximately 2,000 commercial beekeepers even when they find no suitable market for their honey. Collaterized by surplus honey, such loans need not be repaid if market prices fall too low. The honey subsidy has cost taxpayers an average of $75 million annually over the past five years.

Thomas Daschle, D-S.D., said R-R.I., said honey producers "can compete in the world. And they ought to."

A yes vote was to preserve the federal honey program.

GOP's Adkins ready for Ford

Candidate gears up for tough campaign

Burl Adkins

Burl Adkins defeated Westland resident Glen Kassel in the Republican primary Tuesday for U.S. Congress, but he faces a tough task in trying to pick off incumbent William D. Ford in November.

Adkins received 5,729 votes compared to Kassel's 3,966. Ford, who was unchallenged in the Democratic primary, polled 15,864 votes.

The 15th District includes Garden City, Westland, Canton Township and part of Livonia in addition to several downriver communities.

Adkins outpolled Kassel in Livonia (730-536), Westland (769-663) and Canton Township (932-558). Kassel out-distanced Adkins in Garden City, 371-295.

THOUGH FORD faced no primary challenge he had a busy primary week.

Ford married Washington attorney Mary Whalen on Saturday in San Diego during services attended by both families.

His honeymoon was cut short, however, when he was forced to undergo emergency abdominal surgery Tuesday at Oakwood Hospital, Dearborn. Ford was "recovering nicely" by Wednesday morning, according to a staff spokesman, and was expected to be released from the hospital within 7-9 days.

Adkins edged Kassel by 365 votes in a four-way GOP primary two years ago, but he faces a tall order in the fall trying to unseat Ford. Even with George Bush at the top of the ticket, Ford defeated Adkins by a near 2-to-1 margin in 1988.

In line to become chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, the 25-year congressional veteran could prove an even more formidable opponent this year.

Adkins portrays Ford as an almost-imperial incumbent — isolated from constituents, out-of-touch with their concerns and ripe for upset.

He has challenged Ford to a series of debates "to defend his liberal tax and spend policies."

"I feel people are looking for a change," Adkins said.

ADKINS IS founder and president of Global Technology Associates, Ltd., a Lincoln Park-based firm that supplies technical services to auto suppliers.

Kassel is a real estate and insurance agent with a Wayne-based agency. Adkins built his campaign on protection of American workers, especially auto workers.

Tax changes are necessary, Adkins said, to make American products more competitive. Tax breaks aren't needed, he added, for foreign companies, building plants in the United States.

Adkins has been a particular critic of the Mazda plant in Flat Rock, claiming it will cost jobs, rather than expanding the work force.

Teenager fighting to recover after leg severed

By Ralph R. Echtinaw
staff writer

Westland teenager Ginny Denison's left leg lies somewhere at the bottom of Half Moon Lake in Washtenaw County, cut off by a motorboat propeller on the Fourth of July.

Denison, however, lies in the University of Michigan Hospital, heavily dosed with pain killers, without control of her bladder or bowels, slowly recovering from an accident that for all intents and purposes should have killed her.

The 17-year-old girl was driving boyfriend Tom Elkens' jet-ski when a 28-year-old Redford Township man's boat collided with her, according to the Washtenaw County's sheriff's department.

She floated in the water, conscious the whole time, as the Redford Township man helped put her into a nearby fisherman's boat, the department said. Denison was taken to the dock of a cottage where two U-M Hospital nurses happened to be staying.

The nurses attended to Denison, perhaps saving her life, before an ambulance arrived. Denison was taken to a clear spot where the hospital's helicopter could land, then rushed to Ann Arbor.

The Washtenaw sheriff's department expects to bring charges against the Redford Township man when Denison is well enough to be interviewed and to testify. Marine Safety Officer David Egeler said alcohol was a factor in the accident.

Meanwhile, Denison fights to recover.

'She's got a lot of people pulling for her. She's an amazing girl.'
—David Egeler
marine safety officer

"WE RECEIVED probably 30 to 50 calls the first week after the accident," Egeler said. "She's got a lot of people pulling for her. She's an amazing girl. She can remember details of the accident that are just phenomenal. She's going to make a terrific witness."

Denison's mother, Donna, has been at the hospital every day since the accident, as has Elkens. Mrs. Denison spends her nights at the Ronald McDonald House in Ann Arbor, husband George said, while Elkens visits his girlfriend after work. "He's been there since the accident happened," George Denison said.

Doctors aren't sure if Ginny Denison will every regain control of her bladder and bowels. And fitting an artificial leg won't be easy either, as the leg was taken off so near the hips.

While the former John Glenn High School teen did well in intensive care, she has regressed somewhat since. "She's not doing real well right now," said her attorney, Charles Butler. "She's run into a lot of complications. She's on pain medication, heavy pain medication. Going up to the new rooms, she's had problems with vomiting and fever."

DENISON HAD agreed to be interviewed, but Butler didn't think that a good idea. He's afraid, he said, Denison will falter further while contemplating the accident's effect on the rest of her life.

Butler added that he has developed tremendous admiration for Denison. "She's a cute-as-a-button 17-year-old, yet she's tough as nails," he said. "(Her surgeon) told me this is one of the most traumatic injuries he's ever seen."

Denison had quit school before the accident and taken a dishwashing job at Denny's Restaurant in Westland. She was there four weeks before July 4 and manager Dan Kegley said he thought she'd just walked out on her job when she didn't show up for work.

Shocked when he found out what happened, Kegley intends to put out a tin can at the register and take donations to help pay Denison's hospital bills.

While George Denison has insurance, he doesn't know if it will pay all of what he expects to be a very expensive hospital bill.

"What it's going to cover, I don't know," he said.

Credibility lost

How to restore confidence

WHETHER AN example of undue influence or merely bad policy, Schoolcraft College's attorney selection controversy casts a poor light on board procedures.

The dispute in a nutshell: the Livonia-based community college is considering changing its legal representation. But only one law firm has been interviewed — and recommended — for the job.

That firm includes former state Rep. Robert Law as a partner. And Law is a family friend of board president Mary Breen.

That relationship has thrown up a red flag for fellow trustee Jack Kirksey. In a display rarely witnessed at Schoolcraft board meetings, Kirksey accused Breen of "cronyism" in favoring her friend's firm for the job and hinted he might resign from the board in disgust.

And in the midst of the heated debate another trustee — Thaddeus McCotter — suggests the board should have considered the issue in closed session.

The issue raises disturbing questions. Why was only one firm considered? Is this the procedure Schoolcraft uses in selecting other outside contractors?

And finally, even if trustees disagree with one another on policy matters, there's no need to circumvent the Open Meetings Act and resort to holding closed sessions. That's bad policy.

Kirksey has suggested the board set up clear standards for evaluating the college's present law firm as well as potential successors.

Another trustee, Harry Greenleaf, suggested the attorney interview process begin again.

We believe both suggestions have merit.

We urge Schoolcraft College trustees against entering into an agreement with any law firm until the college formally announces it is seeking new representation, invites bidders to submit proposals and conducts public interviews of bidders.

Beyond that, we urge trustees to make this the guiding procedure for all other outside services — even those "on call" services, like college legal counsel, that involve neither a contract nor a retainer fee.

We also urge the board to adopt new guidelines requiring all trustees to fully disclose any relationship, however minimal, with any bidder.

We'd also like to hear the board reaffirm its commitment to open meetings.

Whatever its outcome, the legal services fiasco has damaged public confidence in the Schoolcraft board. Adopting these guidelines would be a major step toward regaining board credibility.

Downtown

DDA should move on plan

IT SEEMS LIKE YOU have to go at least 10 feet on Ford Road between video and party stores.

And we're afraid that will keep happening until Canton grows into Ypsilanti.

There is a way to at least create some sort of *town center in Canton Township. It's the long-*planed downtown development district, an 86-acre parcel at Ford and Sheldon roads.

The center would include a 3-acre commons area that would serve as a gathering place.

The project is being pushed by Canton Supervisor Tom Yack. We agree with Yack. Something has to get off the ground before it's too late.

Last week the Downtown Development Authority (DDA) delayed making a decision on creating the district at Sheldon and Road roads. The group will look at a new plan on Aug. 22.

Opposition to the plan comes from Norman Newman, who owns 26 of the 86 acres of land to be included in the district. He wants to build shopping malls on the site and claims that the only way a DDA can be put together is if the township buys the land.

We suspect Newman's opposition is the reason the DDA decided to wait to look at the new plan being pushed by Yack.

We hope the opposition doesn't kill the plan. Somebody has to take a stand on the continuing construction of strip malls and while the downtown district plan isn't a cure-all, it's at least a start.

Dirty campaigns

THEY'RE BACK.

No, not the "Poltergeist" gang for another movie sequel. We're talking about abusers of campaign ethics.

Based on a sampling of just-concluded and downright-awful primary campaigns, opponent bashing and the use of questionable tactics look like they're here to stay as we head into the November general election.

That's too bad. Because while candidates have embraced this strategy as the easiest way to the winner's circle, voters are being turned off and the public is getting shortchanged.

Here are a few examples of what voters had to shovel through on their way to the polls Tuesday:

- The Lansing-based Michigan State Republican Committee mailed a pamphlet to residents in Troy and Madison Heights last spring claiming state Rep. Wilfred Webb, D-Hazel Park, is on the wrong side of the drug war because he voted to "kill" a controversial bill that would allow police to wiretap the telephones of suspected drug users. Webb, running for re-election to his 66th District House seat, said the pamphlet misrepresented his December 1989 action, which was to keep the bill in committee, rather than send it to an immediate vote on the House floor.
- Debbie Schlussel, a Republican candidate for state House from West Bloomfield, admitted her claim to a reporter that she was, at age 16, the youngest Southfield City Commissioner was a tad misleading. Schlussel was talking about her tenure on a parent-youth guidance commission in Southfield, not a government body. Schlussel also mailed literature to potential voters with a misleading, bold-faced plea on the envelope: "Open Immediately — Important Tax Information Enclosed."
- Wayne County Commission candidate Terri Reighard Johnson of Westland sent out an eight-page brochure on her priorities. The first six pages ripped incumbent Kay Beard for supporting pay raises and other perks. These are the same salary and fringes that Reighard Johnson will inherit should she win the seat — unless she decides to give them away.

EVEN STATE SENATE hopeful Rep. David Honigman, R-West Bloomfield, dipped into the mud last week after running a mostly clean campaign against opponent state Rep. Judy Miller. Honigman sent out a brochure with a full-color picture of Miller's new house with the message that taxpayers were "paying the price" for Miller's move. To less-than-careful readers, the brochure implied incorrectly that taxpayers were footing the bill for Miller's house. What Honigman was actually referring to was that Miller missed a state House vote on property taxes because she had to attend the closing for the property.

This is nothing new, of course. But negative campaigning seems to have gotten a giant boost two years ago, when George Bush continually beat up on Michael Dukakis on his way to the White House. This year, the tactic has made the jump to statewide and local campaigns in Michigan — from the governor's race on down.

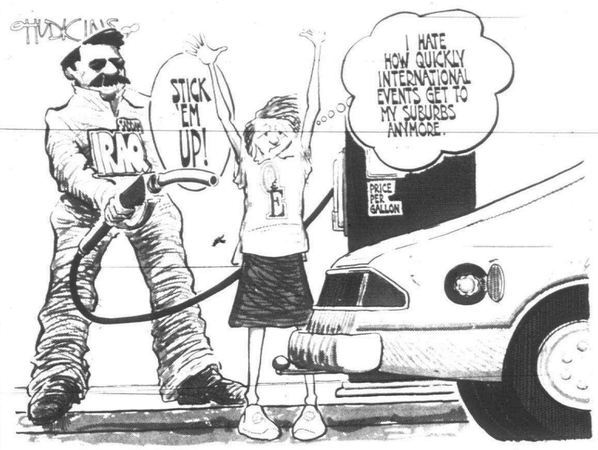

What has happened is that in this era of increasingly big-bucks campaigns the candidates are no longer in charge. That role has been taken over by consultants and marketing experts. Doubters should note that the political consulting field in the United States has grown from 200 in 1980 to 5,000 today, according to an article in the August Oakland Business Monthly.

When the grassroots style of running for office began to disappear, ethics started its predictable nosedive.

WE FIND THAT no one — other than Tuesday's winners — is served by this new, high-tech kind of campaign. In addition to soiling a calling that doesn't have the best reputation to begin with, it further removes from the people the political process and the government that process creates.

When the voting public gets some slicked-up marketer's version of a candidate and a little mud from his opponent, can they really make an informed decision at the polls? Unless they have kept up with newspaper coverage of the campaign or watched or attended candidates nights, we don't think so.

And how many potential voters — fed up with these phony images and negative tactics — stayed home Tuesday? Nobody knows. But introducing further apathy to a public already disenchanted with its government seems to be the unintended effect of these efforts.

Story of Detroit's ills is omen best heeded

Suburban Detroit has been designed as if the city of Detroit doesn't exist, a reflection of many who mistakenly believe that the suburbs could survive very nicely without Detroit.

Steve Barnaby

"DETROIT IS not the enemy."

My colleague Leonard Poger, a longtime journalist and metro Detroit resident, was emphatic. He, like many, was reacting to the recent excerpts from Ze'ev Chafets' soon-to-be-released book, "Devil's Night and Other True Tales of Detroit."

The excerpts, which first appeared in the New York Times Magazine on Sunday, July 29, and since in the downtown Free News, have slapped the collective psyche of a metropolitan population upside the head.

And it hurts.

IN TRUTH, metro Detroiters have been masters at covering for and rationalizing away the tragedy of Detroit. But Chafets has ripped away the blanket of denial and, for once, we are standing naked for all the world to see.

In his book, due out in October, Chafets outlines the economic and social deterioration of Detroit since the 1967 riots. A former Detroit resident, he left the Motor City in 1967 to live in Israel.

Like Rip Van Winkle, he awakened to a radically changed city, bearing only a skeletal resemblance to what once was. Chafets is obviously shocked, as we all should be.

Unfortunately, those of us who have lived through the deterioration of one of America's major cities have become dulled to the decay. We look through it, blinded to the injustice which has led to tragedy. Or, like characters out of the Bible, we deem the decaying city unclean and treat it as a diseased leper, demanding it stay out of our sight.

We have fooled ourselves into believing the situation isn't all that bad. We have dulled our senses, scorched our hearts and literally given up.

Much of the metropolitan suburbs are populated by those from the outside — those who never lived within city borders and who were either born in the suburbs or moved in from outside the area to work, live and play.

They feel little or no obligation to a city which they have done very fine without.

Suburban Detroit has been designed as if the city of Detroit doesn't exist, a reflection of many who mistakenly believe that the suburbs could survive very nicely without Detroit.

In truth, metropolitan Detroit may be the very first region in America to allow its major city to simply disappear.

Certainly, there is enough blame to pass around. But we are far beyond the point of assessing fault.

Indeed, Detroit isn't the enemy, and to let it die would be a supreme act of societal terrorism, an act of self-immolation. For if the city of Detroit fails, suburban Detroit will follow.

Let none of us blame the messenger, Ze'ev Chafets, for the bad news. Rather let us have the courage to sit down together, make peace with ourselves and rebuild our city.

Editorial is wrong on issue

To the editor:

Your editorial regarding my position on campaign financing is erroneous, and I'm sorry no one contacted me from your office beforehand.

I have never suggested Michigan should change to public financing of campaigns.

You assume that there is only one form of tax checkoff, that in which an individual directs part of his or her tax obligation be directed to the campaign fund. I would never support such a checkoff for campaign use because of problems created for the rest of our budget and my position on tax credits and tax diversions has always been quite clear. No one could possibly "get their hands on your hard earned money" whom the voter did not like since voters concerned about this would simply not participate in this strictly voluntary program.

As chairperson of the House Elections Committee it is my responsibility to pursue various avenues for reform to assure the public Michigan's system is the cleanest and most efficient possible.

Anti-growth zoning column challenged

To the editor:

Steve Barnaby's column, "Public Deserves Say in Development Wars," is breathtaking in its inanity. The writer's suggestion that municipalities re-zone private property to arrest development displays a shocking advocacy of the use of state power for the benefit of a few citizens.

At a time when eastern Europe is freeing itself from decades of state repression of personal and property rights, it is appalling that Mr. Barnaby seeks to tighten government control here at home.

If a municipality wishes to preserve undeveloped land, it should buy the property. This distributes the cost of such preservation across the entire community, instead of forcing the property owner to subsidize the plans of a few influential citizens.

I would here refer Mr. Barnaby to the final clause of the Fifth Amendment, which prohibits the taking of private property for public use without the payment of just compensation.

A restrictive anti-development zoning can strip tens of thousands of dollars from the value of a parcel of land. That Mr. Barnaby considers this a small price to pay is self-evident — his property is obviously not at stake.

I will leave Mr. Barnaby with one final note. Studies reveal that apartment and condominium complexes, as well as commercial businesses, contribute more to a local community than the value of services they consume. In fact, the only type of property which poses a net drain on a community's resources is the single family home.

It is fiscal suicide to continue this inequitable shift of the tax burden from homeowners to renters and business, while at the same time restricting growth of the latter resource. If gambling is Mr. Barnaby's intent, he should visit Las Vegas and cease his manipulations of local economies.

Drinking's public image slowly eroding

Judith Doner Berne

IT IS HAPPENING. The real story is getting out. Fatal auto accidents in which liquor is involved, families torn apart by alcoholism, crimes committed to get money to get high, a party turned surly because someone or someones had too much to drink.

The truth aided by community involvement is making inroads over past practice and advertisements which continue to portray drinking in a glamorous light. The image of drinking as the thing to do to have a good time is ever so slowly eroding.

In Sunday's Freep/News two stories caught my attention: "This California Bar won't serve liquor, especially to lawyers" and "Drinking ebbs with new Navy attitude."

The State Bar of California is touting a new program to deal with substance abuse in the legal profession, offering a 24-hour hotline for lawyers seeking treatment and offering insurance coverage for such help.

California law schools will be urged to include a substance abuse course and the Bar's mandatory continuing education program will require lawyers to take a course on the subject to keep their licenses.

Michigan, incidentally, has had a lawyers and judges assistance program since 1978.

The other story told about the Navy working to deglamorize alcohol by changing the atmosphere in their after hours clubs, stressing anti-drinking programs and alternative forms of recreation.

CLOSER TO HOME, each of Michigan's public universities this fall will offer students the choice of a non-drinking roommate. Michigan State University and Oakland University will go a step further to offer whole dorms where students who do not drink, take illegal drugs or smoke can choose to live without pressure to do otherwise.

Unfortunately, most teenagers still do not understand the message, although many of our communities are working hard to deliver it to them and to those who provide them with liquor.

Most Oakland County and a few Wayne County communities covered by the Observer & Eccentric Newspapers now have house party laws, prosecuting those who serve liquor to minors in their homes.

Rochester Hills has recently carried this a step further, making it a misdemeanor for teenagers to attend those house parties. Other communities can do the same.

And many of our police departments are now sending underage decoys into establishments to try and halt selling and serving to minors.

Cigarettes haven't disappeared in a puff of smoke, but there are few people more uncomfortable than today's smokers. For a long time, that's how uncomfortable non-drinkers felt at nearly every social gathering.

But the tide is turning. The pressure to drink responsibly and to respect those who have chosen not to is mounting. And for those who do not drink because of their genetics, religion or preference, the world is an easier, safer place.

Let's not waste our time on kids' hair

Doc Doyle

Q: I saw several young kids in the mall yesterday with spiked and colored hair. With school starting in a few weeks, it seems some school rules should be made now for proper appearance. Frankly, I am tired of "rights" for anything and everything. We were never allowed to go to school looking like that. Do you agree?

A: I agree. It always bothered me when I was a teacher/administrator. However, I eventually realized the energy I was investing in this lost cause would be better spent focusing on teaching or developing exemplary educational programs.

Long before spiked hair, I remember Murphy's mustache. Murphy, once a senior at Bentley High School in Livonia, was expelled from school in the '60s for having a mustache.

Many of the administrators watched as Murphy's case went through court. Most of the administrators in my peer group were moderate. But deep down, it seemed we wanted the case to go our way so as to have the right to determine appropriate student appearance.

Our fear was where it would lead to. Would boys soon sport hair over their ears? Who knows? Long flowing hair down the back of boys' necks could result. What an unmanly state of affairs.

What would the citizens, the taxpayers think of high school administrators? Would it cost us our jobs?

It did cost jobs in certain situations back in the '60s. Or, at least, was used as the final stroke to get rid of some building principals who were were on their way out anyway. Now it all seems so bizarre.

As a former high school administrator who went through the long haired hippie movement, the Murphy mustache caper now seems part of a time warp.

In fact, some of my high school peers were suspended for coming to school with a Mohawk . . . too little hair.

You suggest schools set some rules regarding hair — spiked or otherwise. We've tried and we have lost in every case since Murphy's mustache.

I met with Murphy during his expulsion just prior to his court ordered re-entry into high school. I found him to be a fine young man, a boy who got an ulcer from this belief that a mustache didn't distract from him being a student.

The meeting erased my prejudices that hair or any other externals had anything to do with the present value or future potential of a young adult going through a phase or cause at one time in their life.

My guess is less than one percent of today's student population has spiked hair. That's why they stand out in the mall and that is why they do it. As long as they don't profess violence — as the skinheads seem to — their day in the sun will come and go.

There is only so much energy school teachers and administrators have to give each week, each day. Let's not have them spend the enormous amount of time we did in the '60s on a lost cause — the length or color of a kid's hair.

Teachers and administrators are in school to present the best education they possibly can. They're really not barbers.

Garden takes 1st thanks to horses

Tim Richard

It's a free country. The lady of your house can ask for five pounds of chocolates if she wants. The lady of this house asked for 500 pounds of horse manure.

MOTHER'S DAY present for the lady of our house was 500 pounds of horse manure.

It's a free country. The lady of your house can ask for five pounds of chocolates if she wants. The lady of this house asked for 500 pounds of horse manure.

It's paying off in the garden.

Getting the horse manure was a bigger project this year. A stable overlooking Northville Race Track is gone, replaced by tax-producing condos.

To make a long story short, a young woman we met at a wedding turned out to be a horse trainer in Jackson County — standardbreds (trotters and pacers). That's the kind of horse manure you want. The late R.T. "Tommy" Thompson, racing columnist and honcho of these newspapers until 1975, used to tell us thoroughbred (runner) manure wasn't worth you-know-what.

The Jackson trainer's compost pile turned out to be eight years old, with the best stuff on the bottom. Digging and hauling it in the station wagon were my job.

As I spent months poring over state budgets and Supreme Court opinions, the lady of the house ran the garden.

THE TOMATO plants are 6½ feet tall. The green tomatoes on them are as thick as clusters of grapes.

The 5lb lettuce is the size of cabbage leaves.

Our Norwegian elkhound used to scoop out a spot in the garden and lie in the cool earth on hot days. No more. I think she's afraid the tomato plants will reach out, like a creature from a swamp, and envelop her.

While supermarkets displayed sickly yellow beans (before Aug. 1, anyway), we were wolfing down vansized helpings of the tenderest, biggest beans this side of Eden. No, you can't have any. No, we won't even sell you any.

THE REAL test will come when we see what we can do with corn. (I say "we" loosely because all I did was haul the 500 pounds of horse manure and spade the plot.)

In past years the sweetest — and most expensive — corn came from a nearby farmer. He has sold off much of his land for a subdivision of homes as big as Don Quixote's windmills. The lots are priced at double what my house sold for. In this McWages economy, we're wondering how folks can afford those behemoths. Can't be that many drug dealers moving out of Detroit, can there?

Anyway, those houses are going up in the old corn and tomato patch, so we're trying our hand at sweet corn — "Michigan gold," I call it.

Corn is supposed to be "knee high by the Fourth of July." Ours was bellybutton high. The experiment is looking good.

PURISTS SAY you should cook sweet corn immediately after picking. You should get the water boiling and run from the field with your bucket of corn. If you trip and fall along the way, forget it and get fresh corn.

Our cornfield is two feet from the patio. No such freshness problems.

Michigan gold can be boiled a few minutes, or it can be soaked in water with a few husks on it and roasted over a charcoal fire until the kernel tips start to turn brown.

Give the elkhound my steak. I'll take the sweet corn.

I've smelled Florida citrus farms in February, Atlantic fish tugs, tobacco curing in a Carolina barn. Good smells, no question.

But the most succulent odors are fresh vegetables from a Michigan garden in August. And here is a toast to the 500 pounds of standard bred horse manure that made it possible.

Going for the gold

Area karate champ wins state, U.S. titles

By Lincoln Naumoff
special writer

Redford Township's favorite karate champion, Al Doorlag, has won again.

This time Doorlag has earned a gold medal from the Goodwill Games in Seattle.

Doorlag qualified for the Goodwill Games by taking gold medals in the Michigan AAU Championships as well as the National AAU Championships in New Orleans in early July.

Currently Doorlag, 23, attends Western Michigan University. He teaches karate to a small group of students, and two of his proteges — Elana Karstofsky, formerly of Redford, and Michael Collier — scored well at the New Orleans National Championship AAU Tournament.

AT THE Goodwill Games, karate is an individual as well as a team effort.

As a Black Belt-65 Kilo champion, Doorlag won three of four matches in the sparring or free fighting events to contribute to the team's total points to win the gold medal.

Prior to the Goodwill Games, karate has been a preliminary event and now starting with the 1992 Olympics in Spain karate will be on a par with all of the other sports in international competition.

> 'Karate is not a bunch of people running around sticking pins in themselves or breaking blocks of ice. That's for the movies. We are athletes, not entertainers.'
> —Al Doorlag karate champion

Competition in the U.S. started with 2,400 competitors throughout the nation. All AAU state champions in each division met in competition at the National AAU Championships in New Orleans and Doorlag won the national title for the second year in a row.

He used his success in New Orleans and his credentials to gain a spot on the U.S. National Amateur Union Squad that competed for honors in the 13 nation competition in Seattle.

"We had 10 team members with three alternates," said Doorlag. "We competed against Mexico, Russia, Great Britain, and Italy."

The Goodwill Games represented more than 50 countries with 2,500 participating athletes. Only the top eight teams or individuals in 21 sports were invited to compete. There was a total of 86 horus of live coverage on TBS Cable Television July 20 through Sunday.

KARATE IS a sport where points are awarded for "blows" that are landed with the karate technique being involved.

As in all the other Olympic sports, the standards of karate are very high. In the European countries karate, as well as all the other sports, is subsidized by the government.

This is not so in America, however. American athletes participate in all of the tournaments but still have to train on their own time at their own expense. The European athletes have time to train on a regular basis free from monetary worries of making a living.

The U.S. Karate Team will be going to Hawaii in November to compete against Japan. Later in 1991 the team will be going to Europe for more competition.

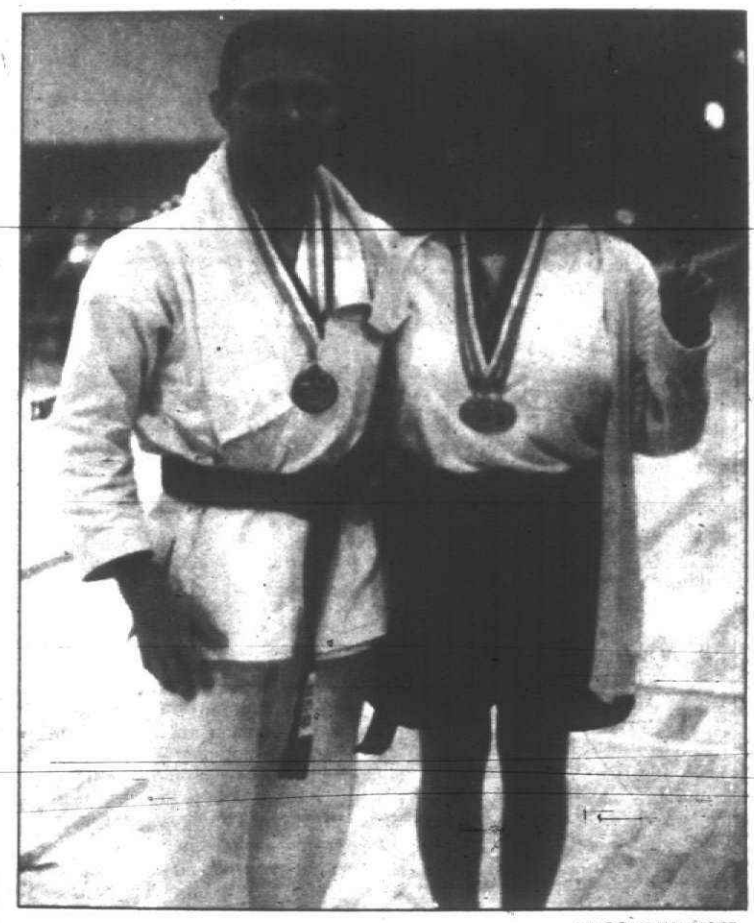

"I have been on the AAU team for three years and all of this competition is a prelude for the 1992 Olympics in Spain."

Doorlag makes every karate match a learning experience. "I hopefully want to impress enough people in order to be considered for more training in preparation for the 1992 Olympics," said Doorlag.

While he is training hard to make the Olympic team in 1992, Doorlag continues to set the record straight concerning the martial arts, namely karate. Karate has been glamorized in the movies by entertaining the public with its power and strength.

Doorlag disagrees with the Hollywood concept, though. "Karate is not as bunch of people running around sticking pins in themselves or breaking blocks of ice. That's for the movies. We are athletes, not entertainers."

Redford Township will be joining Michigan watching and following the activities and progress of both of its National AAU Karate Champions, Doorlag and Karstofsky, and watch for them in the 1992 Olympics in Spain.

Architect/adventurer built his career brick by brick

By C. L. Rugenstein
special writer

Until Indiana Jones and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" came along, archaeologists were percieved as quiet scholarly types who liked to poke around old ruins.

Now, with the publication of his autobiography, "From An Israeli Pioneer to An American Architect" (1989) Louis Redstone of Livonia may revolutionize our perception of architects. Few, if indeed any, architects have followed as adventurous or dangerous a path into the profession as Redstone seems to have.

Take, for example, the time in Israel (1920) when he was on a volunteer arms smuggling mission to fledgling Jewish settlements and was stopped by a British patrol.

Raids and searches of the settlements were frequent.

"Possession of arms was punishable by long prison terms (under British rule of then-Palestine) and heavy fines," Redstone said. Sometimes resisters were "shot on the spot."

He was given a water flask and told it contained a pistol.

That evening as the band of five amateur smugglers were rounding home, they heard the "heavy thump of a British patrol" followed immediately by the patrol itself.

Photograph taken in 1922 shows the construction of the governor's residence in Palestine. Louis Redstone was one of the stone masons.

THE CAPTAIN POINTED his flashlight directly at Redstone, who said he instinctively reached for the flask.

In a daze he heard himself say, "If it's water you want, the flask is empty."

According to Redstone the captain replied,

"You fool, I dont't want your damned water, I want to know the time." His light was aimed at Redstone's wristwatch.

In his book Redstone recounts his 87-year odyssey (he was born in 1903) from Grodno, Poland, to Detroit via Israel.

Even leaving Poland turned out to be a dangerous venture at the time (1920).

The economy was bad, work was scarce. For Jewish people the situation was even bleaker.

"There was no hope for a higher education. Jewish people in particular were not being accepted (at universities) anywhere," he said.

He succumbed to the lure of recruiters to go and rebuild Israel.

Since the Russians and Polish were fighting over Poland, Redstone literally caught the last train out. Every train after his was stopped.

As a young pioneer in Israel he helped to replant trees (on Mount Carmel for one). But before he could do that, the workers had to build their own barracks. And Redstone's interest in architecture was born.

"It was my first experience at physical work, and the process of creating a shelter with my own hands was exciting," he said.

He apprenticed with an Arab stonecutter and learned how to make houses.

He said he didn't realize it at the time, but he was learning the business by the hands-on theory practiced in the bauhauses (guild halls) of Germany, "An architect has to go through all the different work to get the feel of the material before he becomes an architect."

Adventure and danger were waiting for him when he immigrated to Detroit in 1923 to join his brother Sol.

While attending the University of Michigan he worked summers as a bricklayer for construction companies.

AS AN APPRENTICE he made union wage — $.90 per hour. After he passed the masonry exam he received full union wages, $1.50 per hour, "One of the highest rates in the construction industry," he said.

"Bricklayers and plasterers were the highest paid . . . in construction at that time." Ironically he noted, "In Poland, bricklaying was (considered) the lowest profession."

While working as a bricklayer on the construction of another downtown monument, the Buhl Building, Redstone had another brush with death.

In those days builders didn't want to go to the expense of putting up scaffolding for bricklayers. The bricklayers had to walk out on planks fastened in the windows to finish mortaring (called "pointing") the brick around the windows. He was out on a plank when it shifted suddenly throwing him backward. But he said, "Some force threw me forward onto the plank," and he managed to get safely back to the building. The incident put him in bed with a wrenched back for a week, he said.

Redstone graduated from U-M in 1920. Twenty years later he got a degree in architecture and urban design from Cranbrook, where his adviser was Eliel Saarinen.

SAARINEN HAD A STRONG influence on Redstone's architectural philosophy as did the late sculptor Samuel Cashwan.

Redstone and Cashwan celebrated 50 years of creative partnership three years ago. A small model of Cashwan's suspended sculpture in the lobby of Manufactuer's Bank headquarters sets on a table in Redstone's office.

"We met one summer vacation I was passing by Arts and Crafts (now the Center for Creative Studies) where he had his studio. I stopped in and said I wanted to study sculpture, he said "come on in," Redstone said.

Redstone collaborated on several of his books on architecture and sculpture installations throughout the world with Ruth Redstone, his wife of 51 years.

Though retired as president of the architectural firm of Redstone and Associates, he's still chairman of the board and goes in to the office every day.

The office is filled with the artifacts like the Cashwan sculpture, and brilliantly hued paintings which Redstone has done.

Being only one of two Jewish students in his freshmen architecture class at U-M turned Redstone to art for solace. He's exhibited several times, the latest in 1988 at CADE Gallery in Royal Oak. He's been a strong force in the organization of the outdoor sculpture exhibitions at the Southfield Civic Center, sponsored by the Business Consortium for the Arts.

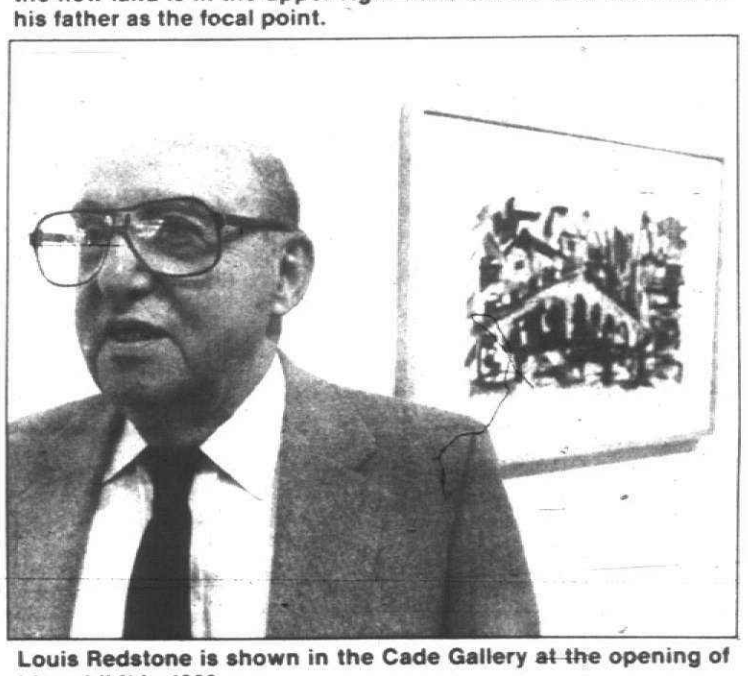

The danger days are over for Louis Redstone, architect-adventurer, but he still enjoys the adventure of grandparenting.

His favorite pasttime is being with his three grandchildren by his architect-sons, Daniel and Eliel.

"They come on Sundays and paint in my studio," he said.

Louis Redstone used symbolism in this painting, which he did in the early '40s. It shows the courtyard in Grodno, Russia, where his family lived. The broken apple tree symbolizes the destruction of the home during the Holocaust. The vision of the new land is in the upper right-hand corner with the face of his father as the focal point.

"From An Israeli Pioneer to An American Architect," is available at local book stores as well as at Detroit Institute of Arts and Cranbrook Academy of Art Museum sales areas.

Woodcarving

An art beyond decoy ducks

George Kinsler of Westland proves that woodcarving is an art.

By Linda Ann Chomin
special writer

More than 100 exhibitors lined the aisles with carousel horses, rabbits, dogs, a stork and ducks at the 16th annual Livonia Wood Carving Show, Aug. 4-5. Art pieces from 200 varieties of wood were displayed at the Eddie Edgar Arena in Livonia.

A common misconception about wood carving is that the subject used by woodcarvers is always decoy ducks.

If "you say wood carving, people think ducks," said Mary Finn, a wood-carving instructor at Craftsman's Cove in Livonia. "Woodcarving is sculpting. Woodcarving is an art."

Albert Charles of Farmington Hills, a former tool maker for Burroughs Corp., agreed that it is an art, creating something from nothing.

"You start out with a big hunk of wood. You start carving, then it starts taking form. Carve a little longer and it starts coming to life," Charles said.

Along with the tools, books and wood that are needed to produce the woodcarvings, a contagious air of fun and festivity filled the arena.

"We have an awful lot of fun," said Bob Brooks, president of the Livonia Wood Carvers Club. "We share. We believe in sharing. We would like to get the community interested in carving."

"The show was started by the Livonia Wood Carvers Club, and for the last 16 years has been sponsored by the Livonia (Department of) Parks and Recreation," Brooks added.

THE WORD FUN reappeared in conversations held with wood carvers throughout the weekend show.

Donald Toll of Livonia stood next to his unfinished barn owl, which is an endangered species.

'You start out with a big hunk of wood. You start carving, then it starts taking form. Carve a little longer and it starts coming to life.'

— Albert Charles
Farmington Hills

Toll, who has been carving for nearly 12 years said, "It's a stress reliever. It's very relaxing, fun."

Many "not for sale" signs hung in the arena and exhibitors agreed that people don't carve wood for money.

Woodcarvers carve wood because it relieves stress, it is fun and for the camaraderie — the friendship of fellow carvers. They carve wood to be together, to sit and talk, Brooks said.

Bill Lovell and wife, Florence, of Southfield were popular for selling wood starters.

"My starters are ducks for beginners to find out if they like to carve," Lovell said. He has carved ducks about the size of a 6-week-old kitten from over 200 different varieties of wood. Red cedar, walnut, cherry wood, and bass wood ducks with glass eyes stare at the browser from behind Lovell's enclosed glass display case.

"TO START CARVING, all you need is an interest in woodcarving, and the gumption to do it," said instructor Finn.

"Buy a starting knife for $6 to $8, some basswood and a strop to keep your knife sharp, so you don't have to put it on a stone," Finn said.

"To start carving, we use basswood. Basswood comes from the linden tree. We start out with basswoood because it holds the shape well. It's soft and easy to work with."

The Livonia Wood Carvers Club had an endangered species table set up at the end of one aisle. The table was filled with carvings of several endangered species, and literature from the U.S. Department of the Interior, Fish and Wildlife Service. The brochures gave information on pesticide use and endangered species and what you can do to stop the extinction of wildlife.

Jeff Zibble of Garden City sat carving a northern blackcap chickadee. Zibble, who said his grandfather inspired him, has been carving for one year.

For a vacation, visit homes of great writers

Victoria Diaz

IF YOU'RE looking for a vacation that's a bit out of the ordinary this year, why not visit some spots that are of great historical significance?

No, I'm not talking about stone monuments, museums, cemeteries or battlefields. I'm suggesting you take a leisurely look at some of the places where great American writers once lived and from which they produced some of their most memorable work.

You might begin in the Northeast, which is a real hotspot in that regard. All of the following (just a partial list of places you could visit there) are open to the public.

Near Pittsfield, Mass. is Herman Melville's Arrowhead Farm, where he took up residence in 1850, and and completed "Moby Dick."

The simple white frame house, deep in the heart of the Berkshires, looks out on Mt. Greylock, which some observers have noted resembles a ghostly whale surfacing in the misty distance. A quotation from Melville's essay, "I and My Chimney," scratched out probably by the author himself, is still visible across the sooty, kitchen fireplace.

LOUISA MAY Alcott wrote "Little Women" and several other of her popular books from the family home, Orchard House, in Concord, Mass. The two-story clapboard home, with its small, mullioned windows, cramped rooms and uneven floors, overlooks Lexington Road. It was an aging house even when the Alcotts moved in in 1858. Alcott wrote in her drafty, upstairs bedroom while her father, Bronson Alcott, entertained such colleagues as Hawthorne, Thoreau and Emerson in his downstairs study just inside the front door.

In Cambridge, you'll find the splendid mansion Henry Wadsworth Longfellow called home for the last 40 years of his life. This silk-and-velvet splendor is not the condition, of course, in which most contemporary poets live, and it was certainly not how most poets lived in Longfellow's time, either.

But the author of such American classics as "Evangeline" and "The Courtship of Miles Standish" happened to have "married well," as they say. Here, in his red-draped study that looks out on the Charles River, he composed "The Song of Hiawatha," "The Wreck of the Hesperus," "The Children's Hour," and most of the other works that made him one of the most popular poets of the 19th century. Longfellow himself planted several of the linden trees at the back of the house.

DON'T MISS Mark Twain's fabulous, fanciful, riverboat-like mansion in Hartford, Conn. The 19-room home was once called "one of the oddest looking buildings in the state" by the Hartford Daily Times.

But America's great humorist, who often marched to a different drum, adored the unusual house, which he helped design. Here, both Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn were created in his large study, a room that was eventually relinquished to his children for a schoolroom. (As long as you're in the neighborhood, be sure to visit the Harriet Beecher Stowe house. The author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was Twain's next-door neighbor. Though she'd already written her most famous work when she came to Hartford, the Victorian mansion reflects Stowe's strong personality and her less-recognized talent, painting.)

The cramped, unpretentious cottage where Edgar Allan Poe composed the immortal lines of "Annabel Lee," "The Bells" and "Ulalume" is in the Bronx, N.Y. Poe moved to the tiny house around 1846 from mid-town New York, in hopes that its higher ground would prove to be a healthier location for his young wife, suffering from tuberculosis. The move was in vain, however, and she died there within the year. Poe wrote in an attic room reached by a narrow stairway just outside her bedroom door.

WHAT WASHINGTON Irving liked to call his "little Dutch cottage" hugs the banks of the Hudson River at Tarrytown, N.Y., and the wisteria vine he planted when he lived there still flourishes at the front door. He had already created his notable short stories, "Rip Van Winkle," "The Spectre Bridegroom" and "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" when he took up residence in 1835 at the house he called Sunnyside. There, he spent much of his time working on the five-volume biography of his namesake, George Washington. The desk at which he worked — a gift from his publisher, G.P. Putnam — remains in his study, near the tiny alcove in which he slept when Sunnyside was overrun with guests, as it often was.

Popular western novelist Zane Grey was born in Ohio (Zanesville), and lived much of his life not in the western United States, but in a rambling, country home near Lackawaxen, Penn.

Surrounded by large evergreens, the white frame home of the dentist-who-became-an-author is multi-storied, and filled with fascinating memorabilia, including old sombreros Zane collected, western and Indian artifacts, copies of Grey's 86 books, magazines in which his fiction and non-fiction appeared, plaques from his dental office, movie stills from "Riders of the Purple Sage," correspondence, old pens, pencils, yellow foolscap.

Grey's bare-floored office, with its cluttered desktop and rather worn-looking Morris chair (from which he wrote his first western novel, "Last of the Plainsmen") looks as if he'd just stepped outside for a breath of fresh, Delaware Valley air.

"Book Break" is a regular feature in Creative Living.

Museum shows offer striking contrasts

By Corinne Abatt
staff writer

It takes either nerve or stupidity to write about the Helen Frankenthaler and the Tyree Guyton exhibits at Detroit Institute of Arts in the same article.

But, I have never shied away from stupid, and one could find relationships (granted more shirttail than close) between the two beyond being in the same section of the museum, one floor apart.

Frankenthaler grew up in New York City, youngest of three daughters of New York Supreme Court Justice Alfred and Martha Frankenthaler. She graduated from Bennington College, traveled in Europe, took graduate courses in Columbia, quickly became friends with many leading artists of the '50s when she settled in a studio in New York City.

She paints what she sees in a most ingenious and courageous style — and what she has always seen are magnificent lands and seas, bays, sailboats and fine art. She does this with such abandon and with such a love of color that the viewer vicariously experiences a thrilling sense of freedom.

She moved beyond classical restrictions with grace and consummate skill, leading her peers into a new world of techniques that involved painting on the floor, according to Jackson Pollack, and pouring paint directly on the canvas, so the rich color saturates it heavily and after continued applications and manipulations takes on an rich glow.

Frankenthaler's paintings are hard to leave, they have inner resources that surface gradually like a friend slowly revealing himself over long hours of conversation. And in that vein, "Salome," with its many veils of color, is the prime example.

GUYTON, TOO, paints what he sees around him, but instead of broad vistas of green and wide open skies, his is city streets, abandoned houses and piles of trash and debris.

His exhibit, part of OMAP, Ongoing Michigan Artists Program, is an installation and display of the kind of thing Guyton has done in the Detroit neighborhood around Heidelberg street where he grew up. He has received international recognition for the project, which continues to be done in collaboration with his wife, Karen, and his grandfather, Sam Mackey.

Guyton's assemblages of found objects, from douche bags and bicycles, tires and toilet seats, doors and dolls, are dense, highly energetic and colorful.

He is a highly artful arranger — in the DIA show, the bedsprings over the American flag illustrate his keen eye. One painting, "Wheel of Fortune," a thick, dark green ground, with an actual bicycle tire on it (partly painted blue) and half of a checkerboard at the bottom has a strange, unlikely relationship to Frankenthaler's "On the Cusp," a floor above.

OF COURSE, her dark green ground is elegantly saturated canvas, her circle is edged in gold and the dash of pinkish at the bottom looks like an exotic bird.

This isn't to make light of either — Guyton thinks like an artist just as Frankenthaler does and he uses what he has available to create.

In an excellent video about him made by Harvey Ovshinsky, Guyton says, "I realize that ugly exists, but I try to look beyond that . . . I truly feel an artist looks at problems and tries to solve them.'

Certainly Guyton's art began as a way to solving problems. As noble as turning trash into beauty was his idea of introducing the neighborhood children to the fun and excitement of art, to let them express themselves, to let them see that a a can of old paint is a can of magic.

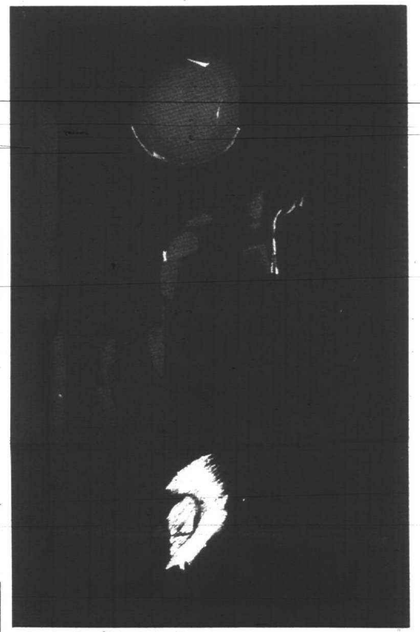

As shown in the film, Guyton has his share of dissenters — people who wish he's just pack it up and get out, but he can't do that now, he's become too famous.

Frankenthaler and Guyton inhabit opposite ends of the spectrum. Yet, both have made substantial contributions to art, each has a vision. Frankenthaler is known worldwide, Guyton's getting there. And they're only a floor apart.

These shows continue through Aug. 19. Guyton's is free of charge, there's a fee for the Frankenthaler — seems logical, doesn't it?

The artists responsible for the Heidelberg Project in Detroit are Karen Guyton (left), Tyree Guyton and Grandpa Sam Mackey. Each did one wall of the installation at the Detroit Institute of Arts.

"On the Cusp" by Helen Frankenthaler is acrylic on canvas, about 6½ by 4 feet. The background is a rich forest green. The circle is lighter green with an edge of gold, and the center marks are gold and deep blue. The splash of red at the bottom lights up the whole canvas.

Mantelscape to sinkscape, it's time to re-do

By Joan Boram
special writer

A dumpster on the front lawn is the status symbol of the '90s. It's what the Rolex and the BMW were to the '80s."

That's the latest from Home Magazine's merchandising editor, JoAnne Pier, speaking at a seminar co-sponsored by Home and Schoolcraft College's Continuing Education Service in Livonia.

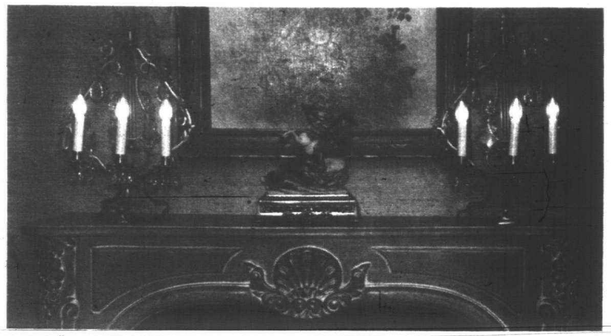

The theme of the program, at the Michigan Design Center in Troy, was "Redesign, Redecorate, Remodel" — the buzzwords of the '90s, according to Pier.

That's where the dumpster comes in. Pier didn't say whether dedicated trendies were abandoning last year's Rolexes and BMWs in the dumpster, but there seems to be room in there for almost everything else.

Traditionalists among us may think of redecorating in terms of new wallpaper or paint, but not those folks at Home.

"Redecorating and remodeling are synergistic," said Joseph Reggiero, editor-in-chief of the California-edited publication. "Redecorating now means tearing down a wall to enlarge an area or to add a bath or potting corner. The ranch home of the 50s is being rethought and redesigned.

"Housing is prohibitively expensive; people just can't afford to move. A cheaper, more efficient use of money is to turn the attached garage into a master bedroom suite or to install custom-designed windows and French doors to open up a room to the outdoors."

Tablescapes and mantelscapes are an ideal place to show things you particularly like. This look could be changed using different accessories in an asymmetrical arrangement for a pleasant change of pace.

MANY CALIFORNIA homes, influenced by indigenous Spanish architecture, are open to the environment, hacienda-style. Master baths open to inner courtyards, kitchens and dining rooms to herb gardens. Often, shutters replace curtains, resulting in a less cluttered, country effect."

Ruggiero predicts that, in the '90s, gardening will replace gourmet cooking. Why would anyone want to watch a souffle rise when they could watch a cabbage grow is his argument.

That's how we got the potting corner. After all, you can't very well throw your garden tools in the garage — you've just turned it into a master bedroom suite. When you were a gourmet cook you displayed your copper pots. Now that gardening is your thing, it's logical to display your garden tools.

So just take a little space near the back door and strew the area with clay pots, pruning shears, a few seed packets and some nice black dirt. (But no pesticides; just leave them under the bed.)

It's part of the California rustica look, said Ruggiero, who moved to California from New York a year and a half ago. "Which is adapted from European country. Gardens are European, especially vest pocket gardens in the front yard.

"First impressions are very important. A combination of perennials — old fashioned flowers, such as hollyhocks, roses and daisies — along with pots filled with herbs that smell luscious as you come up the front walk, creates a much warmer, more welcoming, entrance than closely clipped grass and boxy foundation plantings."

Together, Ruggiero and Pier elaborated on important new decorating elements of the '90s.

TO CREATE a personal style, mix textures and finishes — real or simulated natural elements, such as stone, metal, natural grain woods, stoneware and tile. Fabrics are nubby and textural. Mix is what's important here. Minimalist is out.

American country is giving way to Eurocountry — a cohesive look, putting together a mix of styles, traditional blended with country. The days of one style furniture or one furniture finish are ended. No more relentlessly "Mediterranean" rooms. Mix fabric patterns — plaid, floral, ribbons.

Pier said natural whites are the bridge between formal and casual. Shades and textures determine the mood. For example, an antique lace runner on a scrubbed pine table modifies the countryness of the table and adds a note of elegance. Queen Anne's lace in a silver teapot, completes the formal/country tableau.

"Grey was the neutral of the '80s. It was everywhere. The neutrals of the '90s are earth tones — taupe, brown, mocha. Jewel and spice tones are hot right now.

"But if you like pastels, as I do, stay with them. It's your home. The main thing is to suit yourself. Live with whatever you're most comfortable with."

TABLESCAPES AND mantelscapes are an important way of displaying both your personal interests and your good taste. A dish of vanilla creams and a pot of ivy just won't do it any more.

Pier cites an understandably anonymous authority who decrees that it's the kiss of death not to change the accessories in your tablescape once a week, a stunning blow if you expect a merit badge for dusting that often.

Tablescapes combine a melange of objects such as books, flowers (in non-traditional containers, such as a mug or a pitcher), a pretty plate, a piece of Majolica ware. All combine to achieve a French country look.

"Put a picture on the table and lean it against the wall," says Pier. "It's a very casual look, like you forgot to hang it."

Harmony is vital to a successful mantelscape. Unlike the charmingly disarrayed tablescape, the mantelpiece is a disciplined still life.

For an asymmetrical look, place everything at one side of the mantel, leaving the rest of the mantel bare. Such an arrangement might inlcude an "important" piece of sculpture with Art Deco candlesticks or a "classical" stoneware vase filled with flowers and one or two pictures layered against the wall.

Or, if your life is spent juggling career and family and housekeeping, you might just like to repair to the sinkscape and do the dishes.

William and Florence Lovell of Southfield know there is a lot of fun in being a woodcarving buff.

"It takes me anywhere from three days to three months to carve my songbirds and ducks," Zibble said.

Nineteen years ago, the Livonia Wood Carvers Club was started by a few carvers who were attending a weekly senior citizen's meeting. "If people would like to find out about wood carving, to see if they'd like it, I'd encourage them to come to a meeting of the Livonia Wood Carvers Club," Finn said.

'To start carving, all you need is an interest in woodcarving, and the gumption to do it.

● SYMPHONY AUDITIONS

Metropolitan Youth Symphony will have auditions Saturday, Aug. 25, at Nardin Park United Methodist Church, 29887 W. 11 Mile, Farmington Hills.

The symphony is a non-profit organization whose purpose is to provide, promote and foster a high level of musical experience. Membership includes 220 students from 30 school districts Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties.

Concert literature is primarily classical, providing a chance for members to develop their symphonic repertoire.

To audition and for the fee schedule, call Charlene Madill at 651-7652 evenings.

All orchestral instrumentalists may audition — violins, violas, string basses, English horns, tubas, bassoons, winds, brass and French horns.

Conductors are music educators chosen for expertise in working with young people.

The three levels of achievement are:

● String Orchestra, Jackqueline Coleman, conductor, two years instrumental experience, able to read music. Grades five and older.

● Concert Orchestra, Richard Pippo, conductor, three years instrumental experience, Grades 8-12.

● Symphony Orchestra, Alan MacNair, conductor, four years instrumental experience, Grades 10-12.

All three orchestras rehearse 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Saturdays, September through May, at Southfield-Lathrup High School.

The program is designed to complement school music programs and private instruction.

The program includes three formal concerts a year, including one at Orchestra Hall, mid-year scholarship competition and senior scholarships.

● VISITING ARTIST

Coinciding with the reopening of the Community Center of Farmington-Farmington Hills after extensive remodeling and refurbishing, West Bloomfield artist Dodi Sikevitz will be the first to exhibit paintings in the "Visiting Artist" program.

Sikevitz attended the Art Institute of Chicago and is continuing her study at the Birmingham-Bloomfield Art Association.

An advertising executive until moving to Michigan in 1985, she now devotes her time to fine art and commissions.

Her awards included winning the Palette and Brush Club's "Impressions! Expressions!," the December and June covers of the Michigan Bar Journal and finishing third in the Dearborn Community Art Council's "Relative" exhibition.

A selection of Sikevitz's watercolors will be on exhibit 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays through Aug. 31 in the Community Center of Farmington-Farmington HIlls, 24705 Farmington Road. For additional viewing hours, call the center: 477-8404.

● STRUCTURES EXHIBITED

A traveling exhibition will come to the Ann Arbor Hands-On Museum, 219 E. Huron, in August.

Entitled "Structures," this exhibit features workable models illustrating some of the important elements of man-made structures. Arches, bridges, trusses and beams are all examined using simple models, pictures and descriptions. The exhibition was created by the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia.

This month, the Ann Arbor Hands-On Museum will explore Newton's Laws of Motion.

Can you pull a tablecloth from under a glass of water without spilling a drop? Why does a gyroscope stay up when it is spinning? Which way does a balloon go when you let the air out?

Find out the answers to these and other questions by way of hands-on experiments to illustrate the three physical laws.

Demonstrations will be at 1 and 3 p.m. Saturdays and 2 and 4 p.m. Sundays at the museum, 219 E. Huron. Call 1-995-5439.

The museum has 160 exhibits that invite visitors to learn about science, art and cultures. It also offers classes and workshops, weekend demonstrations, special events and outreach school and community programs.

The Living History Encampment will recreate life from the 1700s to 1840. Hear top jazz artists at the jazz competition. Tour historic houses and churches.

Art alumni preserve Cranbrook splendor in show

By Jackie Powell
special writer

Princeton University's Robert Judson Clark has said, "The influence of Cranbrook is still with us, and is still being renewed."

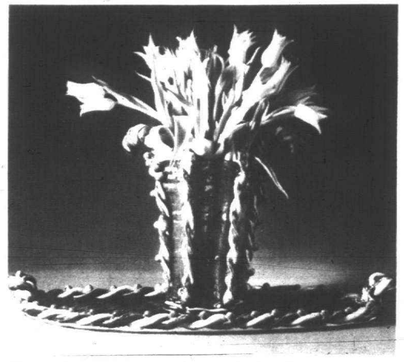

The Cranbrook Academy of Art Alumni Show at Sybaris Gallery of Royal Oak through Aug. 25 lends credence to his statement. Art in the form of stoneware, screenprint on cotton, steel and bronze, woven construction, red earthenware, pewter ... excite the sensibilities.

Jamie L. Goode has taken up the banner of "preserving our planet Earth." Her piece entitled "Mother Earth" was done in response to the outrage she felt after reading an article in the Smithsonian on the pollution of our waters. "I used my husband's Mig welder for this whole piece, working on it 10 hours a day and on the weekends."

Another of her works, a crucible with a cold forged and welded steel hand extending out of the top, holds an acorn. "I feel this is a hopeful piece. A great deal of my work has this kind of paradox."

The hand is used as a metaphor for the planet Earth and its fragile containment of resources. Her "Rusted Hand" exemplifies the result of the tons of waste being dumped into the earth, air and water and how we cross our fingers hoping it will go away.

Goode said, "We live with the fallacy that everything around us is ours for the taking, to do with as we please. It would please me to leave this world in a state that can support life."

Vase and tray by Julie Terestiman is of red earthenware.

Robin Claude McGee walked over to his pewter-textured tree trunk and casually lifted off the top. "It's a water pitcher, a teapot," he remarked. "I'm a traditionalist at heart even though my images are different. I have a strong feeling toward utilitarian vessels."

He said he grew up near wooded areas and was hooked on the beauty of trees, "One of the points of art is supplying enough information to build an image without doing it all for someone. Like a framework, you fill it in yourself."

THE THREAD in Randal Crawford's weaving is hand dyed over and over until it attains the exact shade he is searching for. His work is very slow, often taking many months to complete.

"I don't mind slow," he said. "I keep my spontaneity even when it takes months to finish."

All his pieces relate to the concept of journey. "A stripe records the direction of travel. An interruption occurs, the line has been affected, the line marking the direction and measuring space. How far can I go before a line is no longer a line? The different ways I can discover this line. What is the most interesting journey within the line?"

In his weaving, he records information and draws a path with threads. "I plot shapes within the given space and find new relationships as I continue. The cloth holds the memory of the experience."

"Frida's Quilt" came about as a result of a trip to Mexico, which JoAnn Giordano made with fellow students from Cranbrook. She uses screen prints to express her personal and social concerns.

"Social commentary and humor have been recurring themes in my work. The object, which seems pleasantly decorative at first glance, reveals another layer of meaning upon closer inspection." Her "Frida's Quilt" depicts the life of Frida Kahlo the painter, who was Diego Rivera's wife.

Her "Talisman For Frida" uses Mexican bingo cards as a border for one side of the print. "I used these cards because they're universal symbols."

FROM THE top of this print hang milagros. Each symbol carries a special meaning. "People put them in churches as thanks for being cured," she said.

Others represented in this show are Doreen Mastandrea and Julie Terestman.

Sybaris Gallery is at 301 W. Fourth, Royal Oak. Hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday-Saturday.

"Mother Earth" by Jamie Goode, done in 1988, is steel, 48 inches high by 24 inches wide.

Antique bottle club presents show, sale

Old American glass? It's just glass, right? Wrong. It's American history retold in a handmade mixture of sand and heat that's beautiful and useful.

The 17th annual Metro Detroit Antique Bottle Club's show and sale will be Sunday, Aug. 12 at the Livonia Holiday Inn, I-275 and Six Mile.

Early American glass, in a range of shapes, colors and sizes, goes back to early colonial days and continues through our presidents and the introduction of the railroads (all shown on flasks), the patent medicine era (with its cures and tonics), the home canning period (with 4,000 different kinds of fruit jars) and the many early breweries and dairies (with pottery beer bottles and tin-topped milk bottles).

"Collecting early American glass is a hobby that gives an appreciation for history and geography, affords a network of friends from coast to coast and produces shelves filled with interest," said Richard Roosen, club member.

Prices will range from 50 cents to $5,000.

Show-sale hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Admission is $2.

Harmonize bright colors of stationary

Q. Some of my friends have been criticizing me for the bright color combinations I use for my personal stationery. They say it isn't appropriate for a woman my age. I'm a senior citizen who loves to combine stationery in bright pinks with blue envelopes. Sometimes, I combine red with orange, or orange with yellow. To me, these colors look cheerful. Are my friends right in objecting to my use of bright colors?

A. Your friends are quite wrong in objecting to your use of bright colors. They're probably caught up in the stereotype of how an older person is supposed to behave.

Almost anything lively can be considered out of place. Instead of giving up bright colors, you might try harmonizing them in more sophisticated ways and also take into account the matter of legibility.

Bright colors, with the exception of yellow, actually are quite dark in value. To have adequate legibility, you must have sufficient contrast between the written words and the tone of the paper.

To increase a sense of brightness yet maintain legibility, use bright yellow for the stationery, coordinated with blue envelopes, or slightly lighter pink stationery with bright aqua (blue-green) envelopes. You can explore all sorts of complementary opposites and provide a little cheer to those you are writing to.

"All about color" is a regular feature in Creative Living.

Hemingway is brought to life with two new stories

By Roberta Schwartz
special writer

Granddaughter Margaux frolicing in a fish net in Playboy and two new short stories by Ernest Hemingway have shot the Papa legend full of more juice.

When he survived two fiery plane crashes in Africa, the novelist saluted Newsweek with a bunch of bananas in one hand and a pint of gin in the other. The broken-headed Papa roared that his luck was running good and denied worldwide bulletins that he was dead.

Hemingway, who said that reports of his demise were greatly exaggerated, today seems to be trashing detractors and obituary writers alike.

Unlike Elvis, nobody has sighted Hemingway in a Burger King, but two new stories by the Nobel Prize winner, who killed himself in 1961, bring the writer back to literary life in smashing style.

Readers of "Philip Haines Was a Writer," which is thought to be Hemingway's last story, can rejoice that the writer kept his Rabelaisian good humor to the end. This manuscript discovered in the Hemingway collection of the Kennedy Library in Boston gives fans cause to celebrate. Its comic wit and sophistication have caused a furor.

THE OTHER story, "A Lack of Passion," is even more "inaccrochable" (novelist Gertrude Stein's word for unpublishable) than "Up in Michigan," the story set in Horton Bay, which was rejected for its frank depiction of sex on a dock on Lake Charlevoix.

Several fragmentary versions of "A Lack of Passion" touch on sodomy and homosexuality and Hemingway's venerable publisher, Charles Scribner, would have fainted at such unsavory subjects.

Even more troublesome is that the piece is strictly doze time. Only the most fervent Hemingway fans can wade through long, descriptive passages about a pale, dumpy bull fighter who can't stab the animal and whose sexual prowess becomes a joke.

Those who loved "Death in the Afternoon" and "The Dangerous Summer" will enjoy this newly discovered story as still another tale inspired by the writer's love of the bull ring. While academics quarrel about dating the story and Hemingway's handwritten changes, readers find the themes of tragedy and lost illusions memorable Hemingway.

Set in Paris, the Haines piece lays a trap for those hunting revelations of the much married Hemingway's personal life. Like Ernest, Haines loves his wife and yet innocently falls for her friend, Dorothy. Philip self-pitingly misses his hearth when he divorces his spouse and must wait months for his lover to return from America.

Like the artist-hero of "Snows of Kilimanjaro," Philip regards himself as a "ruined writer" whose life depends on the mailboats and a note from Dorothy. Although neither of them knows it, the love affair ends with an exchange of angry correspondence.

The humor and vitality of Hemingway sing in those pages in which Philip buys new pajamas at the Carnival of Venice for a prospective conjugal night and then buys a pistol to protect a rented Citroen in which to surprise Dorothy.

THE IRONIC note on which the story closes underscores Philip's self-absorption which has left him with tragic realities to face.

He goes to see his wife when he is crazed from loneliness to find that she is about to marry someone else. When he hunts his returning lover on the ship at Havre, the bad air and the iron smell of the liner underscore human inflexibility and failure.

Those who want to read these two stories may join the Ernest Hemingway Society and receive the Hemingway Review and newsletter as part of the $18 annual dues. Hemingway spent his first 22 summers in the Horton Bay area on Walloon Lake and wrote his famous Nick Adams stories about his Michigan summers.

For membership, write to Robert W. Lewis, University of North Dakota, Grand Forks, N.D. 48202.

Livonia Symphony puts dulcet tones 'under the stars'

The Livonia Symphony Orchestra will present a "Music Under the Stars" concert 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 16 at the Livonia Civic Center, Five Mile and Farmington Road.

The free concert will be moved indoors in case of rain to the Madonna College Activities Building, Levan and Schoolcraft.

Conductor Francesco DiBlasi has invited Cynthia Lark, mezzo soprano from Livonia, to appear as guest artist. She will perform excerpts from "The King and I" by Rodgers and Hammerstein and an aria from "The Barber of Seville" by Rossini.

A candidate for the master of music degree in vocal performance at the University of Connecticut, Lark has sung roles in Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" with the Opera Theatre of Connecticut and in Puccini's "Suor Angelica" at the Chautauqua Institution as well as scenes with the University of Connecticut Opera Theatre.

The Michigan State graduate also has appeared with the Cleveland Orchestra and the Opera Company of Greater Lansing. While a student at the Cleveland Institute of Music, she was a member of the Robert Page Singers and was featured soloist with the group.

This year, she performed with the University of Connecticut Symphony Orchestra as a winner of the student concerto competition.

DiBlasi will lead the orchestra in the "Overture to Candide" by Leonard Bernstein, a portion of "Peer Gynt Suite" by Edvard Grieg," "Hungarian March" by Hector Berlioz and "American Salute" by Morton Gould.

The evening's performance will conclude with John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Museum drops to 5-day week

Facing a $1.8 million operating deficit during the 1990-91 fiscal year, the Detroit Institute of Arts will be open to the public five days a week, Wednesday-Sunday, DIA director Samuel Sachs II has announced.

The new schedule went into effect this week.

"We reluctantly depart from our previous six-day public schedule in order to save approximately $350,000 in utilities and other operating costs," Sachs said.

Closing to the public on Tuesday is the single most cost-effective measure recommended by the museum's budget and financial studies. Other less-visible economies are being implemented during the coming weeks.

NEARLY A year ago, the Arts Commission and DIA trustees and staff began an internal examination of budget and program adjustments to balance the projected 1990-91 operating budget deficit.

Over the past five years, the DIA has increased private sector fund raising, installed new financial control and management systems, and made substantial capital improvements to the building, while maintaining a balanced budget.

The total DIA financial activity budget has been in the range of $30 million in fiscal 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Annual financing from the state of Michigan in support of the DIA operating budget remains unchanged at $16 million for the eighth year. Due to inflation, $16 million today has the actual purchasing power of only $12 million, compared to 1985-86.

THE COMBINATION of city and state financing supports a significant part of the DIA's total annual financial budget activity.

The other parts are provided by private sector financial support from individuals, corporations, foundations and endowments generated by the museum's Founder's Society, and earned income from ticket sales, Museum Shop sales and other program revenues.

Private sector support and other program revenues have increased for each of the past five years. Even this response has not been sufficient to fully offset inflationary cost increases and flat public sector support. The museum projects continuing operating deficits in the range of $1.5 to $2.5 million annually.

"We have looked at every expenditure so we can continue to offer visual and performing arts programming of highest quality.

"We refuse to lower the quality of the DIA collection, exhibitions and programs, so the only resort is to trim an already lean operating budget and still maintain our strength as Michigan's foremost art resource, ranking among the country's most comprehensive fine arts collections, and featuring a nationally recognized performing arts program."

IN TODAY'S JOB MARKET EMPLOYERS WANT MORE THAN THE SAME OLD B.S.

Every year, over a million new college graduates put on their new blue suits and go job hunting.

All of them have degrees. Most of them have hearty handshakes. But very few have what employers want most — practical work experience.

That's why there's a nationwide program called Cooperative Education. It allows students to alternate studies at the college of their choice with paid, practical work experience in the career of their choice.

So Co-op Education students graduate with more than a degree. They have practical knowledge. And a competitive advantage in today's crowded job market. And that sure beats trying to B.S. your way into a job.

Families spend some special time together

By Julie Brown
staff writer

When Kay Kerstens is all grown up, she'll still have fond memories of her days at Camp Linden.

"We went canoeing," said Kay, 7, a third grader at Bird Elementary School in Plymouth. "We went to drama."

She likes camp "because you get to do things."

Kay had some company at Camp Linden, a Huron Valley Girl Scout Council camp. Her dad, Gary, came along for a recent "Dad and Daughter" weekend.

"Oh, I think it's great," said Gary Kerstens, a Plymouth resident. "It's a great opportunity."

The session was Friday-Sunday, Aug. 3-5, at Camp Linden in Livingston County. Some dads and daughters from the Plymouth-Canton community participated.

"This is our first time up here," said Kerstens, a pipefitter for B & C Technical Service, a mechanical contractor.

HIS DAUGHTER had been to camp with her mom, but Kerstens hadn't been camping with Kay until this past weekend.

"It seems like a lot of parents don't have the time anymore," he said. "You have to make the time. Helping them grow, raising your kids, you can't do it if you're not there."

Kerstens and his wife spend a lot of time with Kay and with their 10-year-old son, Wes. Gary Kerstens is a Cub Scout leader and spends time with his son at Scouting activities.

THE "Dad and Daughter" weekend included two nights of camping in platform tents. Sports, crafts, cookouts, nature study, swimming, boating and other fun activities filled up the weekend.

"It's one of our top programs," said Sharon Spencley, co-director of Camp Linden. "They really enjoy it."

Dads and daughters can choose what activities they'd like to participate in, said Spencley, a graduate student in guidance and counseling at Eastern Michigan University. Last Friday evening included a dance for the campers.

THE PROGRAM is open to girls in kindergarten through high school, and non-Scouts are allowed to participate. Last weekend's camp session attracted about 160 people, including some dads with two daughters.

"A lot of kids that we have live in the city," said Spencley, who is from Linden, Mich., and has spent eight summers on the Camp Linden staff. "It's a time for them to get away from city life and meet new people from different areas."

The Huron Valley Girl Scout Council also offers a summertime "Mom and Me" program for young campers and their mothers. Both programs give parents a chance to spend time with their daughters.

RICK SRODAWA hadn't been to a Girl Scout camp until last weekend. He came to the camp session with his daughter, Amanda, 7, a second grader at Farrand Elementary School in Plymouth Township.

"I think it's nice. It's something different," said Srodawa, an engineer with Detroit Edison. "We like camping."

The Srodawa family goes on camping trips, although those trips generally include use of a camper and flush toilets. Last weekend was Amanda's first time at a rustic camp site.

"I think that it's pretty fun," said Amanda, who has two sisters, ages 4 and 13.

She and her dad were all prepared for last Saturday's storm, and dressed in ponchos to protect themselves from the rain.

SATURDAY'S STORM meant some changes had to be made in camp plans, but the girls and their dads still enjoyed being together. They spent some time building a fire and eating lunch in Esther's cabin, named for Plymouth Township clerk Esther Hulsing.

The campers also played some outdoor games Saturday morning before the storm began. Fred Floied and his 9-year-old daughter, Susan, were among those playing kickball.

Susan, a fourth grader at Gallimore Elementary School in Canton, came to camp "to have fun." She particularly enjoyed playing lots of games and swimming.

THIS IS the third year they've come to camp. Floied, who works for GM-Delco Products in Livonia, knows it's important for parents to spend time with their kids.

"It's got to be the greatest thing for fathers and daughters," he said. "I think it's super. The counselors do an excellent job. They are extremely friendly, willing to help you always."

He appreciates being able to spend time with Susan.

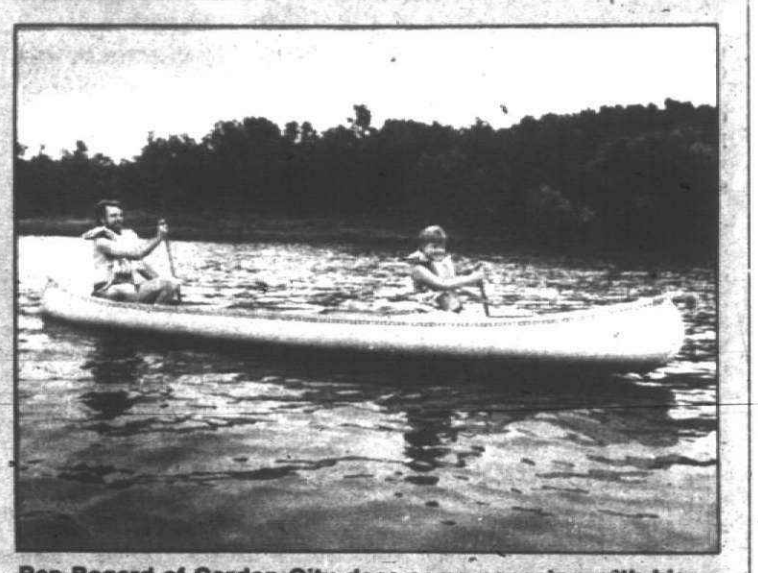

"Daughters get to talk and they feel free to talk with you. Sometimes they have a lot on their minds."

Floied is involved in Cub Scouts as an assistant leader. He also has a son, Michael, 11.

"We've always had camping for the boys."

The outings for girls at Camp Linden are rewarding, he has found.

"And we don't miss TV."

staff writer

Carey Peters doesn't consider herself an artist.

"I dabble in crafts," she said.

She does crewel and needlepoint and makes notecards, using dried flowers and fabrics to create designs.

"I've got some artistic talents, I guess. I just have a sincere interest in it and a love for it."

Peters, who has lived in Canton for three years, is president of the Canton Arts Council, an organization formed in October 1989.

"I've always been one to get involved in just about every place I live," said Peters, activities and special projects director for the Builders Association of Southeastern Michigan.

SHE ATTENDED the initial breakfast meeting of the Canton Community Foundation, heard an arts group was being formed, and volunteered to help.

"I am a great organizer. It is one of my greatest strengths. I really enjoy getting things off the ground, seeing them grow and develop."

She has enjoyed working with other organizers. On the group's board is sculptor Joe DeLauro and others with a variety of backgrounds.

Organizers have several goals. They want to provide programs that are affordable and address the needs of people of all ages.

SHE IS working with Bill Sharpe, another council member, on converting a Canton barn into a theater. They have a specific barn in mind, and want to see it moved to Canton's historic district at Cherry Hill and Ridge.

"We'd like to make it a full-fledged building that's usable for anything related to the arts but primarily theater. That's one of our main projects right now, to get that up and running. We're really excited about it."

They're bringing in a consultant to see if the barn can be moved in its entirety, or if it will need to be taken apart and reassembled. Peters isn't sure just when the project will be done.

Shorter-term goals include offering "fireside chat" programs at a community site. Artists representing different media would demonstrate their work and answer questions.

THE COUNCIL sponsored an art show during the Canton Challenge Fest this past spring, and plans to do so next year.

"We were really pleased with the art show."

Next year, organizers plan to have both an adult section and a student section at the show.

This year's show included a "Play-a-Thon" in which local piano students raised pledges totaling $900 and played throughout the show.

"It was a very nice touch to have music at an art show."

PETERS, WHO grew up in Parma, Ohio, outside of Cleveland, brings a variety of skills to the organization. She studied English at Cleveland State University, and had originally planned to teach.

She worked for several years as a United Airlines flight attendant. She lived in Chicago for a while, and did some free-lance interior design work.

She studied ballet all through school. She took some art classes and can draw, but never had the desire to pursue that interest professionally.

"My interest got piqued when I was in college."

She took a course that required her to critique several live performances. She also remembers seeing "Swan Lake" as a child with her aunt, and being impressed with that ballet.

Peters, 43, was transferred to Detroit from Chicago 11 years ago. She was less than enthused about the move, but has come to enjoy living in Michigan.

"I love it here. I love it and my daughter loves it."

PETERS, WHO lived in Southfield before moving to Canton, has found there are things to do in the Detroit area. She and her daughter enjoy going to plays. They also visit art galleries and stores. Peters isn't all that partial to country and flower scenes.

"I'm a much more contemporary-type person."

Peters has worked for several organizations throughout her career. She worked in the computer department for A.C. Nielson in Chicago after leaving United Airlines.

She took some time off when her daughter was born, and then worked as an assistant to the vice president for computer operations at Kraft Foods.

SHE WAS working for Computervision, a computer design company, when she was transferred to Detroit. She then worked for Tandem Computers as a regional business manager, and has been with the Builders Association of Southeastern Michigan, based in Farmington Hills, for one year.

Her work includes putting on educational programs and seminars.

Peters started builder-community forums in which builders meet with local governmental officials to discuss ordinances and other concerns. She also works in the area of legislation related to wetlands and woodlands.

PETERS, WHO is president of her homeowners association, plans to stay in Canton at least until her daughter graduates. Her daughter, a 16-year-old Plymouth Canton High School junior, is interested in costume and set design.

"I love Canton very much. I believe very much in the community. I think it's a terrific place to raise kids."

The community has good schools, she has found. Peters would like to see some improvements in recreational facilities. She is on the work-study group that is researching recreational needs in Canton.

"There's really no central area for the kids to do things."

Peters, a single parent, keeps busy with work and volunteer commitments, but finds time to walk five miles each day. She enjoys reading and plans to start working on making her Christmas gifts.

Entertaining is also high on her list of things to do, and she particularly enjoys making French pastries.

Canton Arts Council leaders are looking for program ideas and for the names of artists who'd like to participate in next year's show or in the fireside chats. They're also seeking members and volunteers. Inquiries may be sent to the organization at 44920 Ford, No. 145, Canton 48187.

Books offer summer fun for children

By Julie Brown
staff writer

Brenda McDonald's sold on the benefits of reading to children.

"Just read," said McDonald, who has taught music in elementary schools. "Read to them from the day they're born and have lots of books and magazines around the house."

Seeing their parents read at home lets children know that reading's rewarding and worthwhile, she said.

"They get the idea."

McDonald, a West Bloomfield resident, recently performed for a group of preschool children at a program sponsored by the Dunning-Hough Library. The program, held at the Plymouth Cultural Center, was the final get-together for this summer's "Read to Me" program.

THIS YEAR'S program theme was "Batches of Books," and McDonald included some songs about food in her Monday, July 30, performance. She played several musical instruments and sang songs.

McDonald performs at a number of schools, libraries and other gatherings. She also conducts training workshops for educators, teaching them about the importance of including music, rhythm and movement in a curriculum.

She encourages children to participate in her performances, and has several goals in mind while performing.

"I think just to have a fun, enjoyable time."

She tries to stimulate children's interest in books, and uses music to enhance their interest in reading and language.

"I try to not always sing with them." Doing that helps encourage children to sing. McDonald also encourages parents, grandparents and other adults present to sing along, and the children generally then follow suit.

One instrument she played included a bell, wooden block, horn and other music-making elements. McDonald brought along several puppets, including Beary Musical and Singing Sam, to help with her Plymouth performance.

McDonald, who has a 22-year-old son and 17-year-old daughter, taught music a number of years ago in the Birmingham schools.

"I just feel like music is a very important part of children's lives." Children particularly enjoy live performances, she's found.

LAST WEEK'S get-together was the final one for the preschool reading program. The Dunning-Hough Library also sponsored a reading program for school-age youngsters again this summer.

"We've had a wonderful summer," said Mary Ann Pinkerton, a children's librarian. More than 400 school-age children and about 230 preschoolers participated.

"We had more than last year in both programs, so it's grown," she said. "I think it's the community we live in."

Many parents recognize the value of reading, and want their children to develop their reading skills, said Pinkerton, who has three children ages 17, 19 and 21.

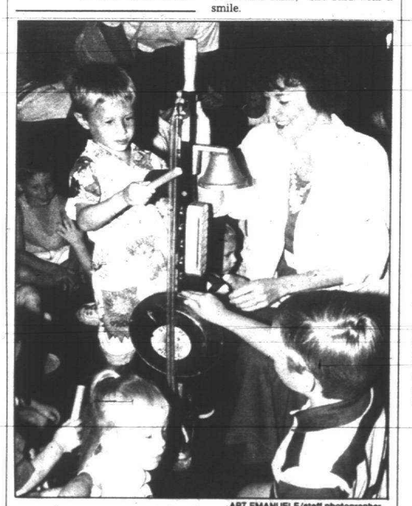

"I think a lot of the credit goes to the parents in this community."

The "Batches of Books" program for school-age youngsters also ended Aug. 3 with a party. The children signed contracts indicating how many books they planned to read this summer, and those who fulfilled their contracts were invited to the awards celebration.

Children are encouraged to read about whatever interests them, Pinkerton said. They read a variety of books, non-fiction and fiction.

"No one's read 'War and Peace.' I think I'd faint," she said with a smile.

The popcorn wagon's a popular place to visit during Plymouth Community Band concerts and other community events.

Their business is popping

By Diane Hanson
special writer

THE BAND'S musical sounds dance on the summer breeze as people gather in the park. They gather to listen, relax and enjoy the evening's entertainment.

There's the aroma of fresh, buttered popcorn, tempting the crowd as well as those strolling by or pedaling their bicycles past the horse-drawn wagon at the park's edge.

An idyllic scene from the early 1900s? Thanks to the efforts of the Plymouth Kiwanis Club, it's a scene from the late 1900s as well. The only difference is that the wagon now rests on a trailer bed and is drawn by several hundred horsepower.

The brightly-colored wagon's a popular attraction at community events.

"People eat popcorn after 5 o'clock in the evening and eat it right up to midnight," said club member Harold Fischer. "That makes band concerts a perfect time."

THE IDEA of restoring an old popcorn wagon as a club project originated in the late 1940s as the brainchild of Fischer, now a 43-year member of the Plymouth Kiwanis Club, and Dr. Fred Foust, a member and local dentist.

Back then, they ran into obstacles with the county health department and decided to shelve the idea. The idea was rekindled in January 1988 when Fischer happened across a man who had just returned from a carnival convention, and knew of someone in Baltimore, Md., who might be interested in selling an old popcorn wagon.

The wagon was indeed for sale and armed with pictures sent to him, Fischer approached the Plymouth City Commission to seek permission to use the wagon. The Kiwanis Club then voted unanimously to buy the wagon, restore it to near original condition and volunteer to operate it.

The next hurdle was raising the money needed for such an undertaking. Club members came up with the idea of lending themselves the money. Some 20 members lent the club the $10,000 purchase price and an additional $4,000 for moving and restoration.

Fischer, Foust and another member, Bob Thoms, went to Baltimore to retrieve the Creders Popcorn Wagon, which had originally come from Howell, Mich. A great deal of restoration needed to be done.

THE ENTIRE roof had to be replaced, and that was done by using chicken wire to reshape the top and covering it with the same material used for the tops of antique cars.

The interior was completely revarnished, and some of the wood around the windows needed to be stripped before it could be restained and varnished. Much of the interior work was done by Fischer and Thoms, who worked on the wagon full time.

All the club members shared in painting the wagon's exterior in its original colors of red, tan and blue. The art work on the outside was painted by Fischer's son, Grant, and Grant's wife, Helen, of Milford.

The only additions — other than the air conditioner and electric beater, which had been previously installed — were a counter top and a stainless steel bin to hold ice for soft drinks. Those were added to comply with Wayne County Health Department standards. The original popper is still fueled by propane.

After two months of dedicated work, the popcorn wagon was ready to roll. That's exactly how it was moved on its original wooden-spoked buggy wheels from the Adistra Corp., where it was stored, to a spot on Union for the 1988 Fourth of July parade in Plymouth.

FOR LACK of a horse to hitch it to, four club members moved the wagon by hand (and foot) to its location.

"It was really hard work," said Fischer, a Canton resident. "After that, nobody wanted to talk to me."

After that experience, club members decided to strap the wagon to a trailer and let a car do the work. These days, the wagon can be moved to almost any location.

The popcorn wagon will be open and available for any special event on the community calendar, Fischer said. The wagon was used this summer for Plymouth Community Band concerts in Kellogg Park and for Art in the Park.

Plymouth Kiwanis Club members volunteer to staff the wagon under the direction of Charles Curmi, popcorn committee chairman, and Timothy White, club president. A large box of regular or large cup of buttered popcorn goes for $1, and Pepsi's priced at 75 cents a cup.

Club members use the proceeds for a variety of projects.

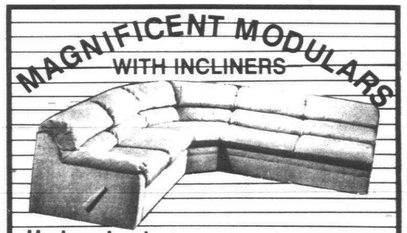

"Once the loans for the popcorn wagon are all paid back, 100 percent of the profits go back into the community," he said. Club members provide money for scholarships at Schoolcraft College. They help students attend Boys State and Girls State, and provide horseback riding therapy for handicapped children.

Kiwanians also plan to support the Drug Abuse Resistance Education (DARE) program and other community projects.

Popcorn sales are "very good," according to Fischer, and those who missed seeing the wagon this summer don't have to do without. The wagon comes out of its garage on Union Street during the winter.

"The Ice Spectacular is our biggest selling attraction," Fischer said. Along with the popcorn, hot chocolate and coffee are sold in the winter.

Preacher believes in being a teacher

By Arlene Funke
special writer

He's the preacher teacher.

"Education is the heart and soul of my ministry," said the Rev. Dr. Thomas Eggebeen, new senior pastor at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church (USA) in Livonia.

Eggebeen, 46, assumed the pastorate of the 1,300-member church in June. He expressed as a major goal offering seminars which teach people how to "enhance their communication with God."

"Every church needs a strong educational program which involves everyone from the youngest to the oldest," Eggebeen said.

Eggebeen, a native of Wisconsin, believes it is his responsibility as pastor to provide a positive and encouraging Sunday worship that sets the tone for daily life.

"If I can put it in a nutshell, it is to provide a joyful environment in which people can learn about God and find out who they are," Eggebeen said.

HE WAS IN high school when he began feeling called to the ministry.

"I always lived with a sense of God being very close to me, and that isn't said arrogantly," he said. "It took a long time to clarify. A number of my friends couldn't believe it. I seemed too unministerlike.

"Ministers were thought of as being tight and stodgy. I was anything but stodgy and I still am not stodgy."

Eggebeen received his undergraduate education at Calvin College in Grand Rapids and his seminary training at Western Theological Seminary in Holland. He holds bachelor of divinity and doctor of divinity degrees.

Ordained in 1970, Eggebeen has served churches in West Virginia, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Oklahoma.

A constant challenge is cutting through the invisible barrier that seems to exist between clergy and lay people.

"Pastors need to continually counteract (that)," Eggebeen said. "The sword cuts both ways. Ultimately, we resent what we are afraid of. We (clergy) are here only because God loves us too."

EGGEBEEN HAS done much research and developed several topics for seminars, including study questions and take-home materials. These subjects include the meaning of baptism and learning to pray out loud.

"Sometimes people need a larger vocabulary," Eggebeen said. "They need words to help describe what they are thinking and feeling."

Eggebeen has studied the role of 16th century Protestant theologian John Calvin, whom he dubs the "theological granddaddy" of the Presbyterian denomination.

The class on "what it means to be Presbyterian" emphasizes the doctrine of grace, or the strong belief in God's forgiving nature, "from the beginning to the end," he said.

"Some people might think the world is under the influence of the devil, rather than God. Presbyterians feel very much the opposite — that we can trust what this world is, we can trust God.

"Evil is real, but God is more real."

Eggebeen has already begun to implement the Stephen Ministry, a St. Louis-based instructional program which teaches basic pastoral skills for handling such tasks as hospital visits and counseling people who are experiencing personal crises.

"It's a ministry of creative listening," Eggebeen said.

THE CHURCH already has a flourishing music program and active youth group, he said. A group of teens from St. Paul's spent time this summer fixing up and refurbishing dilapidated housing in Topeka.

Eggebeen will be looking to target some programs for people nearing retirement age and for others in their 20s.

"Age-wise, it's a well-balanced congregation," he said. "Probably the largest group is aged 55 and up. But there is a very healthy proportion of young people with children."

Community service has been a mainstay at St. Paul's. Several self-help and philanthropic organizations hold their meetings at the church.

Several congregation members donate their time serving meals at Fort Street Presbyterian Church in downtown Detroit. That once-a-week mission program feeds more than 500, Eggebeen said.

"I think this is a very friendly congregation," he said. "I perceive this as one of the strengths."

Eggebeen's wife, Donna, is a real estate saleswoman. Son Josh, 18, and daughter Rachel, 14, are enrolled at Stevenson High School in Livonia.

Eggebeen enjoys going to plays and reading history and biography books for relaxation. He likes to attend movies with Josh and browse in bookstores with Rachel.

A motto which Eggebeen has adopted was a comment by fictional detective Sherlock Holmes that the sleuth "sees when others only look."

"I would hope I would be able to do that myself," Eggebeen said. "To be able to really see and understand."

Weapons don't guarantee peace

Michigan is a beautiful state! At this time of the year especially we feel blessed with water, green forests and pretty nice weather.

Recent reports tell us that our state leaders are concerned about bettering our environment. Even the DNR can no longer poison fish in our streams. But there is something else that is about to happen. Nobody seems concerned. It probably will not stir interest like the poisoning of fish in one of our streams.

The big missiles are being taken out of Colorado and are coming to Michigan. Each holds 10 H bombs. They will be mounted upon railroad cars and be ready to be moved about the state.

When this deadly cargo arrives in Michigan and joins the other 630 nuclear bombs in the state, we will probably not know about it. We will be concerned about our beautiful state and rightly so. We will watch to see that all our refuse dumps are carefully monitored. But who will note the arrival of the trains bearing H bombs?

THESE TERRIBLE weapons have become just like the neighbor's little pet dog. As long as they don't make a noise, we will ignore their existence.

Yet, we all must remember, If we do not remember, we may suffer the consequences. Aug. 6 was the celebration of Hiroshima day. We began a new era 45 years ago.

We must remember the horror that was and the horror that can still happen. I met one of the survivors of that first atom bomb. She was a child then. Now she asks us to remember and work toward a future when this will never happen again. I remember Mrs. Amano from Hiroshima.

I am sure that there are military people who believe that the 630 nuclear bombs in Michigan have helped keep the peace. There are peace witnesses who believe just as strongly that removing these bombs from our state will help achieve peace more completely.

Isn't enough, enough? How many police standing on a corner insure safety? Do we want more H bombs in Michigan? The week in which Hiroshima day fell, 45 years ago, is a time to remember and reflect.

I believe that the world is changing. We need to be ready to change in the directions of co-existence and cooperation. How does it feel for this great state to be going backward?

This whole thing reminds me of an expressway bridge which was built in Boston. Subsequently, the route was changed, leaving the bridge in place, hanging in the sky to nowhere. How do we feel about more missiles coming to Michigan?

London, the smart way

Iris Jones

QUESTION: My husband and I will be in London, England, for one week in August. Where should we exchange dollars for pounds? What is the best way to get around? What are some neat places to eat, what light and entertaining plays should we see and where should we shop for souvenirs (not junk). Thanks for your help. Bonnie.

ANSWER: I've been to London many times, but I asked travel photographer Micky Jones of Farmington Hills to answer your question, because he was there quite recently.

"London is a great place to visit anytime and there is so much to do there that your week will disappear rapidly.

'London is a great place to visit anytime and there is so much to do there that your week will disappear rapidly.'

— Micky Jones Farmington

Before you leave home, visit a local travel agency and buy two Visitor Travel Card Vouchers which entitle you to unlimited use of London's bus and underground systems for three, four or seven days, including the trips to and from Heathrow airport. (They don't cover transportation from Gatwick Airport). The Vouchers cost $15, $21 and $35 and cannot be bought in England.

"Since you may not have time to get information on London attractions, events, shopping and dining from the British Tourist Authority office in Chicago, you can get what you need from the British Travel Center at 12 Regent St. in London. It is a two-minute walk south from Picadilly Circus, the London equivalent of Times Square.

"They will provide you with maps and guide books including the current issue of London Planner, containing a complete theater listing. London is like New York in one way, tickets to the top shows are hard to come by unless you pay scalper's prices or are lucky enough to get a cancellation at the box office.

"Half-priced tickets are available to many good plays and musicals at the Half Price Ticket Booth in Leicester Square. They sell matinee tickets noon to 2 p.m. and evening show tickets 2:30 to 6:30 p.m. on the day of the performance.

"You may be hustled while in line by scalpers selling very high-price tickets to sold-out shows like the Phantom of the Opera. Agatha Christie's 'Mousetrap', which has played continuously for 38 years and is the world's longest-running play.

"For quality products and souvenirs you can't go wrong at either Harrod's department store in Knightsbridge or Selfridge's on Oxford St. For less quality but more fun try Covent Garden and Portobello Rd. If you will be there Sunday, head for Petticoat Lane on Middlesex St. between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. to see the biggest, most crowded and fascinating street market I've ever seen. It only operates on Sundays.

"There are so many London restaurants that it is impossible to make a few specific recommendations. Prices range from moderate to very high so check the menu posted on the window before entering. Most English pubs serve good inexpensive lunnches and are wonderful places to meet local people.

"Wander across Waterloo Bridge to the South Bank Center which is a large modernistic complex of theaters, concert halls, museums and restaurants. It is a good place for lunch or afternoon tea even if you don't stay for one of the shows.

"What do you do after the Changing of the Guard, the Tower of London, Madame Tussaud's, Westminster Abbey and the British Museum?

Take a relaxing boat ride on the Thames; you can choose one that takes 20 minutes or one that takes as long as four hours."

What I would add to Micky Jones' recommendations are a few thoughts about money. I never change my dollars in the United States. I buy American Express travelers checks, free with my membership in the Automobile Club of Michigan or for a small commission at the bank.

Exchange enough at the airport in England to get you through a day or two, then change as you go at English banks. Warning: they charge the same commission for $20 or $200 so don't exchange small amounts. You can change them at a hotel desk but the exchange rate is usually lower.

And remember this rule of travel: there is nothing wrong with scheduling your time loosely, as long as you schedule in time to wander, watch the pigeons and enjoy the street life of London.

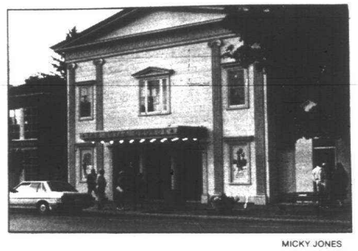

For more information, the British Tourist Authority office is at 625 N. Michigan Ave., Suite 1510, Chicago, Illinois 60611 or call (312) 787-0490.

Dallying through fudge and flowers in Niagara-on-the-Lake

MICKY JONES

Aromas linger from the verandah of The Buttery.

MICKY JONES

The Shaw Festival presents some of the most respected theater performances at The Royal George Theatre.

☐ B&B accommodations, 7B

By Iris Sanderson Jones
travel editor

If I stood blindfolded on Queen Street, I would still know that I was in Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario. It's not just the smell of fudge from the Niagara Fudge shop, the marmalade from Greaves or the aromas wafting off the verandah at The Buttery.

I would smell the brilliant red geraniums that grow around the clock tower outside the Court House Theater. The flowers that hang from the lamp posts and make a red, yellow and blue passage down Queen Street, the main strip in town.

It is only a few blocks from the place where Highway 55 dead-ends on Queen and the corner where Queen becomes Picton Street and bends out of town between the Shaw Festival Theater and Fort George, but everything you need for a colorful short vacation is along that six-block stretch. The rest is available within a block or two on either side.

THE MUNICIPALITY of Niagara-on-the-Lake covers a large area at the end of the Niagara Peninsula, but the picturesque old town covers a few blocks at the very tip, where the Niagara River enters Lake Ontario 14 miles downriver from Niagara Falls.

Old hands say that Niagara-on-the-Lake has changed in 15 years from a small town full of locally owned shops to a tourist center. For a newcomer, it has only one flaw. Flowers or not, it costs more than you might want to spend for a few days in the village.

Any accomodation under $100 is considered moderate, although you can search-and-find less expensive mostly unlisted bed-and-breakfasts. Add $50 a person for a couple of Shaw plays and the bill starts getting high.

Some things cost less Tuesday through Thursday, so we drove in Thursday and stayed where Highway 55 dead-ends, at The Kiely House, a large white verandahed house built as a summer home by a Toronto lawyer in 1832.

Heather Pettit was weeding her large back garden when we parked and walked past the centuries-old Osage orange trees to the back of the house. If you arrive in the fall, watch out for the odd-shaped Osage fruit, which looks like a large warty orange; it thumps down on unsuspecting parked cars.

"The garden smells wonderful," I said.

"It's the hedge," Heather said in her somewhat British accent. "Every time you trim it, it smells like oranges."

IT ALSO smelled like petunias and nasturtiums and geraniums as I followed the scent down Queen Street, past shops with names like Maple Leaf Fudge, Dansk Outlet Store and Cornelis de Jonge Collectibles to the Royal George, the first of the three Shaw Festival theaters I met during my brief love affair with Niagara-on-the-Lake.

I planned to see Shaw's "Village Wooing" there the next day so I went on past the Courthouse building, on the site of the first capital of Upper Canada, now Ontario, in 1792, and settled in for a bowl of onion soup on The Buttery verandah.

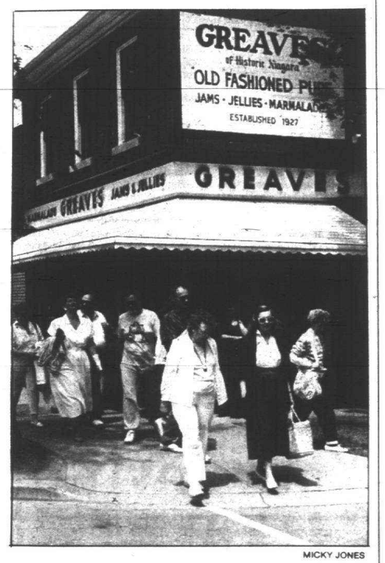

From there I saw the passing parade: shorts and baseball caps, T-shirts and Nikes gave way, as theater time approached, to dresses and jackets moving east toward the Shaw Festival Theater.

Any traveler who likes to do things right would start at the east end of town, where they fight the War of 1812 every day in Fort George. The little blue-and-white map, available in all hotels, tells you that this town was settled at the close of the American Revolution by loyalists, many of them members of Butler's Rangers, based across the river at Fort Niagara.

That's why you see signs, as you come into town, pointing to Butler's Burial Ground and the Negro Burial Ground.

Vintage Junkers renew dreamy days of flying

After three major rebuilds and eight different identities in five countries, this 1936 vintage Junkers Ju 52 tri-motor was fully overhauled and completely restored at Lufthansa's Hamburg maintenance base.

By William Coutant
staff writer

For Lufthansa Airlines Capt. Didi Krauss, flying the Junkers Ju 52 marks the fulfillment of a boyhood dream. And although he's ferrying passengers in the 54-year-old aircraft without pay, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of other airline pilots would pay to take his place.

"I remember this plane from when I was a child," Krauss said. "In fact, we're the same age."

Both Krauss and the distinctive passenger plane were born in April 1936. Lufthansa Airlines resurrected the vintage craft from seeming death and restored it.

The German airline has brought the plane with its corrugated, black and silver body to the United States for a 34-city promotional tour. After stops in Milwaukee and Osh Kosh, Wis., and Grand Rapids, the plane will come to Detroit for the weekend of Aug. 17-19.

WITH IT, the plane brings back memories of a time when piston-engine prop planes were king and the "Aunty Ju" was the mainstay of European air travel.

In 1926, two German airlines, Deutscher Aero Lloyd and Junkers Luftverkehr, merged to form Deutsche Luft Hansa AG, the predecessor of modern-day Lufthansa.

Junkers' Dessau plant built the world's first all-metal aircraft in 1919, the Junkers F13. The plane changed air travel, linking remote countries to Europe. In 1932, the three-engined Junkers Ju 52/3m, which could travel 250 kilometers (150 miles)

The best stays in Niagara-on-the-Lake

By Iris Sanderson Jones
travel editor

Where should I stay in Niagara-on-the-Lake? I learned a lot of things, and ran up quite a telephone bill, while trying to answer that question.

The Chamber of Commerce, (416) 468-4263, has an unusual reservation service. Call or write ahead, tell them what your priorities are and for $5 they'll find you accommodations that fit your needs.

They list 12 hotels and Inns, with rates in Canadian dollars. Multiply by .86 to convert to U.S. dollars. Hotel rates range from $112 to $325 (U.S. $96-$280) a night for two. Inns range from $78 to $140. They also list bed-and-breakfast accommodations from $55 to $95.

I was surprised rates were so high, but Ontario prices are high for everything, and you pay extra for staying in a tourist town that can usually fill its beds, especially on weekends.

The Kiely House welcomes visitors with a delightful ambiance.

THE LARGEST and newest hotel, two blocks from town and overlooking the marina and lake, is Queen's Landing (416) 468-2195, $135 to $325. It is owned by the same family that owns the well-known Piller and Post (416) 468-2123, $132 to $195.

A new hotel across the street from the Festival Theater, the Royal Park (416) 468-2010, offers special rates of $95 to $120 this year. The best known historic hotel is the Prince of Wales (416) 468-3246, on the main street in the middle of town, for $112 to $228.

I started calling my friends and learned that many B&B's are not listed with the chamber.

SALLY SAWYER of West Bloomfield recommended the bed-and-breakfast home of Dorothy McCullough, "a delightful elderly woman who loves to play cribbage," at 300 Niagara (416) 468-4688. A Canadian friend told me she stayed there for $35 last year. But nobody was ever home when I called.

Al and Shirley Sandner of Lansing stay in the Old Bank House bed-and-breakfast (416) 468-7136, overlooking the lake three blocks from town. Rates: $88 with a bathroom down the hall or $125 "en suite" (with a bathroom in the room).

I couldn't get a room there, but they recommended The Wellington House (416) 468-4081, rate $65, run by Richard and Monica Taylor. By this time my phone bill was rising.

Mrs. Taylor was full too. She recommended Carol Grey (416) 468-5423 and Lee and Beth Alma's place (416) 468-4635; rates $50 to $60, (nobody answered their phones) and the Kiely House (416) 468-4588, $75 to $145.

Heather Pettit

"TAKE HIGHWAY 55 until it dead ends at Queen Street and you'll see a large white house with black shutters," Heather Pettit said.

Our room at Kiely House was in the "new wing" built in the 1850s. It's a nice house. The room was small, up a long flight of stairs. The breakfast and ambience were delightful.

It cost $88 plus tax for the night, which still seems high to me as I adjust to village prices.

I ASKED two local people where they would put their relatives if they came to town. One said the Moffat Inn or the Prince of Wales. The other said the Prince of Wales or the Moffat Inn (416) 468-4116.

The Moffat, next door to the Prince, runs $75 to $90. It doesn't have much public space, no lounge, but it is highly rated and in the middle of town.

The Oban Inn (416) 468-2165, overlooking the golf course and lake, is the most popular place in town for dinner and probably has nice rooms for $90 to $130.

YOU MAY not have a choice. Al Sandner of Lansing always gets his accommodations before he buys the theater tickets; after that he reserves dinner.

"I called the Oban Inn for a Friday night dinner reservation three weeks ahead and just barely got in," he said. "Niagara-on-the-Lake is a very popular summer destination."

Where did you stay in Niagara-on-the-Lake? Where do you stay in that other popular Ontario theater town Stratford? There is no question in my mind that the best recommendations are word-of-mouth, friend-to-friend.

Send your suggestions, travel questions, etc. to Iris Sanderson Jones, Travel Editor, 36251 Schoolcraft, Livonia 48150.

Chuck and Mickie Diamond of Southfield, and David and Melody Arndt of Northville, were in Niagara-on-the-Lake recently and will check in to Travel Scene next week with their suggestions and impressions.

Restored German plane holds memories of the flying heyday per hour and carry 17 passengers, made both passenger aviation breakthroughs at the time.

The Ju 52 became the plane of the 1930s in both scheduled services and pioneering achievements, easily winning a race over the Alps from Zurich to Geneva to Milan and back to Zurich.

"It is legendary in Germany," Krauss said. "My whole flying career I've loved flying piston aircraft. And this is the one I most wanted to fly."

THIS PARTICULAR model has an unusual history of its own, almost an encapsulation of all Ju 52s.

One of 5,000 planes built at the Junkers factory between 1932 and 1952, the "Fritz-Simon" with its D-AQUI marking went into service on April 10, 1936.

In July 1936, it was sent to Norway, where it was fitted with floats and renamed the "Falcon" for air travel in the country's remote coastal region.

In 1940, the German army confiscated the plane and used it to transport troops.

"During that time it was (painted) green," said Krauss. "That was not such a good time."

After the war it was returned to the Norwegians, when in 1947, maintenance crews discovered major corrosion damage from wartime service. Another plane was cannibalized for spare parts, and in February 1948 the plane went back into service.

IN 1956 the Ju 52 was retired as jetliners were taking over the skies. With its large wingspan (30 meters), museums weren't even interested. But the plane found another life when an airline in Quito, Equador bought the plane, renamed it "Amazonas" and began flying passengers, cattle and cargo across the jungle.

In 1963, after 8,000 flying hours, the decrepit aircraft was falling apart. It was abandoned on the perimeter of Quito Airport. But once again it was rescued when a former U. S. Air Force pilot, Lester Weaver, bought the wreck in 1969 for $5,200 and had it repaired.

Another American, writer Martin Caidan bought the plane for $52,500 and gave it the name "Iron Annie."

"I just had to buy the damned plane," Caidan said.

After some stints with air shows in the United States, Caidan overhauled the plane in 1976 and put in new Pratt & Whitney engines. He then sold the plane to Lufthansa, which flew it back to Germany in 1984.

THE PLANE was restored, with some parts having to be made from scratch. The restoration took a year and a half. The plane is now named "Berlin-Tempelhof" for the famous airport.

And it flies as well as ever, or says Krauss, a Hamburg native.

"One year before it showed up in Germany, I signed up to fly it," he said.

Krauss and his crew took the plane easily off the ground at Midway Airport in Chicago, much to the delight of those who found space on flights of 30 minutes to downtown and back.

The plane is luxurious, with deep leather seats and, for a propeller plane, a quiet ride. It billows up and rides easily, as the Windy City's turbulent winds move the plane around.

And the view from the venerable aircraft?

"It was incredible," said one passenger. "It flew by Sears Tower, not above it. That was something."

And the landing is smoother than many given by more modern craft.

Krauss, who generally flies nonstop, trans-Atlantic 747 flights from Germany, said he is lucky to fulfill his dream.

After a 16-day, 10,000 mile North Atlantic crossing in winter, this 1936 Junkers Ju 52 was restored at Lufthansa's Hamburg maintenance base. It's second maiden flight occurred on April 6, 1986.

"It is perfect," he said with a smile. "It took them a year and a quarter to fix it. But other than an engine change, it can last another 50 years — at least."

Krauss will be at the controls of his favorite aircraft when it lands at Detroit Metropolitan Airport Aug. 17.

The Junkers Ju 52 will be at Detroit Metro from Aug. 17-19. To see the vintage plane or to reserve a ride, call Lufthansa public relations in Chicago at (312) 751-0111.

Prince of Wales Hotel makes for a memorable stay in Niagara-on-the-Lake.

which operates a flowered parkway up the Canadian side of the Niagara River between lakes Ontario and Erie, the 1793 Treaty of Paris gave Fort Niagara to the United States, where it is still visible across the Niagara River mouth on the American side.

The British, taking no chances, built Fort George on the Canadian side, where it was very busy during the War of 1812. What I like about that war is that markers on the U.S. side say that the Americans won it, and markers on the Canadian side say the Canadians won it.

Whoever won it, when they say "the war" in Niagara-on-the-Lake, they don't mean World War I or World War II, Korea or Vietnam, they mean the War of 1812.

I've never been an organized traveler, so of course I didn't start at the historic end of town, but followed the flowers down Queen-cum-Picton street past the city park and the flowered window boxes of the Prince of Wales Hotel and the Moffat Inn, two of the most popular hotels in town, to the Shaw Festival Theater. Those in the know park free at Fort George.

The Shaw Festival started on the third floor of the old courthouse in 1962 and now has three theaters going full tilt. The festival is not just about British playwright George Bernard Shaw. With the kind of poetic logic I appreciate, the mandate is to produce any plays written during Shaw's lifetime, 1856-1950; fortunately he lived a long life.

As B.J. Armstrong of the Shaw Festival staff says, "artistic director Christopher Newton likes plays that show what happened when the 19th century met the 20th century." That's a perfect description of Shaw's "Misalliance," currently playing with laughter and precision on the Festival Theater stage.

ONE OF the pleasures of a town like this is that you can take one stroll through town and know your way around. By the following morning we felt like old hands: buying Ontario's famous butter tarts from Niagara Home Bakery, oldest business in the village, buying jams and marmalades made by Greaves for 60 years (it changed hands last January).

By noon we had photographed the red double-decker bus that brings tourists from Niagara Falls, and the historic-looking gazebo in Queen's Royal Park. The gazebo looked historic but was actually given to the city by the producers of The Dead Zone, one of several movies made here.

We had poked around the waterfront, watched the fishing boats working the river as it flowed into Lake Ontario. You don't get many boats coming downriver from Niagara Falls!

FOR US it was time to enjoy some of the other sights and smells of the Niagara Peninsula. Flowers bloom up the parkway to the historic McFarland House and on past Queenston to Niagara Falls.

You can visit several wineries (Inniskillen is considered the best wine) and pick your own fruit. In August that includes some of the best peaches in the world. Locals buy fruit at the Harvest Barn on Highway 55 just south of Niagara-on-the-Lake.

He plans to clean up on lots of dirty cars

Mobile wash service targets professionals

By Doug Funke
staff writer

Can a 25-year-old suburbanite successfully run a one-man mobile car wash business out of a pickup truck in an increasingly sophisticated technological world?

Michael Wright, a Plymouth resident, thinks so.

And it's because of technology that Wright can load as much as 55 gallons of water in a couple of tanks, a low-pressure hose system, vacuum cleaners, a portable generator, miscellaneous cleaning products and a cellular phone into his truck to seek fortune if not fame in parking garages and offices.

"It's a fantastic idea," Wright said. "Everyone told me I'm crazy for doing this. Yes, I probably am crazy for doing it, but nothing tried, nothing gained."

Wright, as owner of Executive Mobile Wash, does it all himself from knocking on doors in search of customers to answering his own business phone in the truck to hand washing the vehicles.

He first came across the concept last year while selling medical supplies in Las Vegas.

"I SAW guys washing doctors' cars right at their offices. I thought it was weird, the silliest thing I'd seen. But what an idea, I thought."

Wright returned to southeastern Michigan this year and worked for a while at a family-owned driving range.

"I love my family to death, but we didn't work well together. I didn't want to go to work for someone else."

Wright eventually stumbled across an ad in a magazine for a mobile wash business. The light of recall clicked.

"I DID some calling around, checked it out. Some people pull in $75,000 with one truck. I went ahead and bought the equipment."

That involved an expenditure of some $7,000, Wright said, but he figures that's his only overhead. And besides, it's all depreciable for tax purposes.

Wright generally charges $10 for an exterior wash, $20 for an interior/exterior job and a premium for shampooing carpeting. The average job takes about an hour and uses only about four gallons of water.

Wright is the first to admit that his service isn't for most people. He targets doctors, lawyers and salespeople for whom a clean car is an important part of their professional image.

"THIS IS for the very affluent. It's mostly for the higher clientele, guys who can afford the Porsche, the new Lincoln."

Even the wealthy could get their cars washed more economically elsewhere, Wright said. What he sells is convenience, quality and reliabilty, especially in winter when good intentions don't always translate into action.

"You have all that salt, garbage they're putting on roads. I know from personal experience a car gets grubbed up in winter, especially the interior."

WRIGHT WORKS just as hard at drumming up business as he does washing.

"If a guy thinks he's going to buy equipment, go down to the local mall and wash cars, he's wasting money."

Wright takes the direct approach, knocking on doors with fliers in hand.

"I personally go in there and talk to them, cold spec, first thing in the morning. If a guy can afford a receptionist, he's probably very busy and a service like this would probably be fantastic for him."

WRIGHT HAS a handful of regular customers so far, but he has only been at it a couple of weeks. One of his first clients was the Mayflower Hotel in Plymouth.

"It was nice to see to see someone else give service," said Creon Smith, a co-owner of the hotel. "You couldn't say no to the guy. His price was right. His truck was clean. Someone like that, you have to give a chance.'

Wright's work often is his best advertisement. People, curious as to what he's doing in a parking lot, will stop by for a closer look.

Now, Wright figures if he can just get a big break or two while prospecting parking garages and large office complexes, he'll really be in business.

Executive finds there's really no place like home

You could say that Patricia Braverman has come full circle.

Braverman, 28, grew up in Bloomfield Hills and graduated as valedictorian of Birmingham Seaholm in 1979. She earned degrees from Princeton and Harvard universities.

She has worked as a consultant with Bain & Co. in Boston and McKinsey & Co. in New York. She's toiled for Procter & Gamble Co. in Cincinnati and First National Bank of Chicago. She's also served as an intern in the Washington, D.C., office of U.S. Sen. Carl Levin.

But in March, Braverman came home. She accepted a job as marketing director for F&M Distributors, the discount health and beauty retailer.

Detroit, again, after life in Boston, New York, Chicago and Washington?

"The reason I came back primarily was I missed my family," she said. "I missed them being away 11 years. My grandparents, Harry and

U-M's solar car had local parts

Richard Smith said he approached the project "very reluctantly.

"How would you feel if someone called you up and said 'We're trying to get people to give us some of their services?' " Smith said, recalling his first contact with the University of Michigan's entry in the recent solar car race.

When the U-M's Sunrunner won the 10-day race last month, it was carrying parts manufactured at Smith's Livonia company, Hughes Electronics Products Corp.

That company was one of two area businesses involved with the U-M car.

The other, Howard Delivery Service Inc., provided a tractor trailer and drivers to transport the car to the Florida starting place and follow it along the seven-state course.

Hughes Electronics manufactures printed circuit boards. It built a student-designed board for the solar car and assembled the parts on the board.

electrical engineering from U-M, explained the function of the board this way: "The whole area in the back of the car is solar cells that could take the energy from the sun. Then they needed electronics to take it from there to store it in batteries."

That's the extent of his explanation.

"They started feeding me information that was 'way over my head," Smith said. "I couldn't really tell you what some of the stuff did. You don't have to know what the stuff does in order to build it."

Howard Delivery Service, which has its Michigan headquarters in Rochester Hills and a branch office in Livonia, got involved in the project because an employee had a friend who was on the U-M race team.

The company furnished a trailer that the students transformed into a rolling repair shop, said Dave Nelson, Howard Delivery's district manager.

"OUR COMPANY is going to donate the entire unit to the University of Michigan," Nelson said. "I don't know what they'll use it for, maybe the next race. In the meantime, they are using it to haul the car around to other activities."

Howard Delivery drivers who wanted to participate in the race were chosen by lottery.

"We wanted as many of our employees to be involved as possible. Anybody that was interested in being involved signed up, and we drew names for the 15 to be involved," said Nelson. The company flew drivers to various points along the 1,650-mile course each day.

"The whole company was really interested in the outcome of the race, and everybody was happy that it ended the way it did."

The maize-and-blue Sunrunner came in first in a field of 32 cars, all of which were designed by college students. The U-M students raised more than $750,000 to build the car and cover their expenses. Hughes Electronics and Howard Delivery donated their goods and services.

Smith said he expected the donation to cost his company $4,000 to $5,000, but he said the circuit board he ended up producing would sell for $1,000 to $1,500 on the open market.

NELSON WOULDN'T disclose the value of his company's donation.

"We really haven't put a dollar amount on it because . . . we did it for good will, for the team itself." Howard Delivery does business exclusively with General Motors, he said.

Smith said he hasn't had solar car designers lining up outside his door for his services, and he doesn't expect to see that happen any time soon.

"Solar energy can be a support. It probably has some use," Smith said. "The implication to us is maybe getting some free advertising out of it. Our name was on the back of the uniforms the students wore."

The U-M win entitles the team to compete in the World Solar Challenge in Australia this November.

July's race was sponsored by GM, which won the Australian competition in 1987. Instead of entering its winning car again this year, GM invited colleges and universities to build its 1990 entry.

Ann Korman, always stressed that family is most important."

Personal career considerations also played a big part in Braverman's decision to move.

"I HAD been a consultant for five years and felt now was the time to put knowledge to the bottom line and make decisions," she said.

So she interviewed with about a dozen companies here before finding a good match with F&M.

"The company is comprised of hard working, progressive, loyal people," Braverman said. "I was always a value-oriented customer. It's very important for me to be associated with a product I understand.

"I always loved marketing of consumer products. I can touch them, talk about them."

Braverman, as marketing director, is responsible for advertising, research and public relations. While F&M uses outside consultants, Braverman essentially is a one-person inside marketing force.

The chain, with 75 stores earlier this year, most in the Midwest, intends to expand to 100 by year's end, she said. That growth potential proved to be especially attractive.

'I had been a consultant for five years and felt now was the time to put knowledge to the bottom line and make decisions.'

— Patricia Braverman

"MARKETING IS to understand what people need and want, then provide information to get them to try it," Braverman said. "Our whole focus is the store. We feel our store is our advertising."

Braverman, who initially thought about pursuing a career in law or government service, changed her mind after working a couple of summers for Levin.

"I found government to be a bit bureaucratic. It didn't move fast enough," she said.

A summer stint at the First National Bank of Chicago introduced her to alternatives. "Business deals with people a lot — law, reading and writing."

Braverman credits her parents, Helen and Arthur, for encouraging her and her three older siblings to excel.

"I guess I've always set my sights very, very high," she said. "I've always had a lot of support from my parents. They always had a lot of confidence in me. They always told me to strive beyond my potential."

Frank Newman, president and chief executive officer of F&M, said he was delighted to find someone with Braverman's academic credentials to step into the job.

"HER ENTHUSIASM and her desire to be successful" especially made an impression, he said.

"In our company, we have a nice blend of industry professionals and aggressive, bright people who have joined from the outside," Newman said. "She has a good understanding of consumer products. We can teach the retail business.

"Her main responsibility will be to increase awareness in communities where we have stores through a combination of advertising, PR and community support activities," he said.

Newman isn't surprised that Braverman would want to come back to Detroit after living in other centers of government, finance and industry.

"While we certainly have our problems, there's a great many people who grew up here and it's home to them," he said.

Braverman is just glad to be back.

"I find people in the Midwest much more friendly, open and accepting than on the East Coast," she said.

Braverman, who lives in West Bloomfield, enjoys golf, movies and theater when not busy at work.

Her goals?

"Over the short term, do the best job possible in letting people know how wonderful F&M is," she said. "Long range, be the CEO of a company."

auto talk
Dan McCosh

You didn't really have to wait for Saddam Hussein to invade Kuwait to feel the first tingles of an oil shock.

You could have, for instance, talked to a few powerboat operaters whose crafts get about three-fourths of a mile per gallon after they got back from vacationing in Canada, where gasoline suddenly shot up to about three bucks a gallon this summer. These guys' hair was standing on end.

The fact is that we have been buying gasoline at a quarter the price of Coca Cola for about 10 years now, and in fact Kuwait City was one of the few places in the world where you could fill up as cheaply as in the United States.

Now, with the party appearing to be over, at least for a while, it may be time to review where the auto industry stands relative to its lifeblood — the gasoline all those cars burn.

As usual, it's not a model of advanced planning.

The oil panics of the late 1970s produced a short-lived, genuine interest in fuel economy. This is often cited as the main reason the imports began a sudden surge in sales that today accounts for about a third of the cars sold.

LET'S NOT kid ourselves. The imports that people are buying today are a foot longer and get half the mileage of the minicars that most importers were selling in the late 1970s.

Mileage was tossed out the window, and every escalation in power and wheelbase caused another surge in interest among big-car-hungry consumers.

Today's Honda Accord, for example, is in violation of U.S. Corporate Average Fuel Economy regulations, a dismal contrast to the 40-mpg car that was sold in 1977.

Domestic cars improved dramatically, since they mainly were getting approximately the same mileage as a Mack truck in the early 1970s. That improvement comes measured against truly dismal performance in the bad old days.

The first efforts to meet then-new emissions laws led to incredibly poor mileage, dipping into the single digits, until the first catalytic converters came on the market in 1975.

Remember diesels? Smokey, but energy-efficient (the environmentalists ignored the diesel smoke, for some reason) the Volkswagen Rabbit, Ford Escort, Chevrolet Chevette, and Olds joined the old stalwarts of Peugeot and Mercedes with diesel options. Every one has been taken off the market.

The world powers reacted to the Iraq invasion by the sublimely logical step of cutting off their own oil supply, which is the foreign policy equivalent of holding your breath until you turn blue. You also can expect another short-lived mad scramble to buy "fuel-efficient" cars, a trend that seems to come back about as often as the Hula Hoop.

THE REALITY is that to make any dramatic change in national fuel consumption, the whole automotive fleet must change, not just a handful of new cars. This takes a sustained change in thinking and policy that must continue for at least a decade — the minimum time to replace most of the cars on the road.

Interestingly, it is far less painful to simply build and drive cars with less expansive horsepower (lighter, slower-accelerating) than it is to pursue with the debate over an energy tax, which might have brought the United States into line with world pump prices while attacking our national debt.

Now all bets are off, and we can anticipate a couple of years of more careening about until the Middle East settles down.

Then we can go back to putting our head in the sand, oblivious to who owns it.

Use freelance writer to increase profits

"How much will it cost" usually represents the bottom line for business owners who have no experience working with a freelance writer. Rather than focusing only on cost when making a final decision, remember what you stand to gain from a successful project.

For example, what is an exceptionally written business proposal worth when seeking to win a $20,000 account by the end of next week?

How much time, effort and anxiety would you save by hiring a professional to ghostwrite your formal request for funds, audit your firm's written materials or fine tune your upcoming industry conference presentation?

MAKE NO mistake about it. Sentence structure, vocabulary, tone and diction are worth many dollars in profit to you.

According to Darren Yanke, owner of Yanke Landscaping in Farmington Hills, hiring a writer/consultant to draft his new company brochure led to a 40-50 percent increase in overall account activity.

"Every time we mail or hand out the brochures to area residents and local business owners, about half call back to do business," Yanke said.

He spent about $300 and claims his brochure paid for itself almost immediately.

"SHE (THE freelance writer) really knew how to present the information I wanted to get across, and the end result was a very professional piece of work that I never could have hoped to create on my own."

Project cost estimates vary and will depend on two factors — the nature and complexity of your projects and the level of professional expertise your writer offers. Simple projects such as preparing short press releases, fliers or cover letters may be successfully handled by moonlighters who have writing talent but who are not in a position to advise you in a professional consulting capacity.

IF YOU are seeking direction on one or more projects before the work actually begins, consider freelancers who have formal training in the field of marketing, advertising or small business management. Expect to pay between $20 and $35 and hour for moonlighters charging hourly rates. Freelance rates run from $40 to $90 per hour.

You can keep the price down by preparing as much information as possible for your writer beforehand, and by working with one writer on a variety of assignments. Once you establish a solid, long-term business relationship with a writer, he or she will go out of their way to watch out for your financial interests.

Small business owners who are interested in obtaining information on local sources of professional writing may call MarkeTrends, 474-1149.

Next week, we will discuss the $200 billion youth market.

Q. I have owned McDonald's stock for several years. My purchases look like this (see table A). I recently decided to sell 100 shares and, because the stock is now selling for $34¼, I asked my broker to sell 100 of the shares I bought in October 1986 so that I could register a tax loss on the sale. My broker said that my cost on my October 1986 purchase would have to be reduced by the stock dividends I had received and that I would have a tax from selling those shares. I always thought a stock dividend gave you shares that were free. Is my broker right?

A. Yes, your broker is correct. A stock split or stock dividend does not represent a gift. All the corporation is really doing is dividing the shares into more pieces. The corporation isn't worth more after it pays a stock dividend.

As one writer had put it, receiving a 100-percent stock dividend is just like changing all the dimes in your pocket into nickels. You have twice as many pieces in your pocket, but when you add them all up, you have the same total value as you had before you made the change.

Investors like stock dividends because they usually are paid by corporations that are growing and earning more money.

That growth makes the company more valuable and the price of its stock usually goes up. Companies pay stock dividends usually because their growth has caused the stock price to go up.

Reducing the selling price by cutting the price of the stock in half brings the price down to one that is popular with investors, and they buy it more frequently.

See table B to find out what you should have done.

If you want to keep your taxes at the lowest figure, you should tell your broker to sell 100 of the shares you bought in January 1989.

CITY OF PLYMOUTH
WAYNE COUNTY, MICHIGAN
ORDINANCE NO. 90-3

AN ORDINANCE TO AMEND THE CODE OF THE CITY OF PLYMOUTH BY DELETING CHAPTER 21 AS AMENDED IN ITS ENTIRETY AND ADDING A NEW CHAPTER 21.

Section 1. That the Code of the City of Plymouth is amended by deleting Chapter 21, as amended, in its entirety and adding a new Chapter 21, which reads as follows:

Sec. 2.1 SHORT TITLE

This Chapter may be known and cited as the "Solid Waste Disposal and Resource Recovery Ordinance."

Sec. 2.2 PURPOSE AND INTENT

It is the intent of the City Commission that this Chapter be liberally construed for the purpose of providing a sanitary and satisfactory method of preparation, collection and disposal of solid waste, and recyclable materials, as well as the maintenance of public and private property in a clean, orderly and sanitary condition, for the health, safety and welfare of the community, and to provide for a reasonable system of user fees to defray the cost incurred by the City in collecting and administering waste removal. The City Commission recognizes that in order to conserve our natural resources, as well as to control the ever increasing cost of solid waste disposal, that the separation, collection and sale of recyclable materials will reduce the amount of solid waste to be disposed of, reduce the cost of landfilling solid waste, extend the life of the existing and future landfills and protect and conserve our limited natural resources. All citizens are encouraged to voluntarily recycle and to make use of the facilities therefore provided by the City.

The City manager and his agents are hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as from time to time appear to be necessary to carry out this intent, provided, however, that such rules are not in direct conflict with the City Code or the laws of this state.

12 alternatives to lashing out at your kid.

The next time everyday pressures build up to the point where you feel like lashing out—STOP! And try any of these simple alternatives.

You'll feel better . . . and so will your child.

1. Take a deep breath. And another. Then remember you are the adult . . .
2. Close your eyes and imagine you're hearing what your child is about to hear.
3. Press your lips together and count to 10. Or better yet, to 20.
4. Put your child in a time-out chair. (Remember the rule: one time-out minute for each year of age.)
5. Put yourself in a time-out chair. Think about why you are angry: Is it your child, or is your child simply a convenient target for your anger?
6. Phone a friend.
7. If someone can watch the children, go outside and take a walk.
8. Take a hot bath or splash cold water on your face.
9. Hug a pillow.
10. Turn on some music. Maybe even sing along.
11. Pick up a pencil and write down as many helpful words as you can think of. Save the list.
12. Write for prevention information: National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse, Box 2866L, Chicago, IL 60690.

Stop using words that hurt. Start using words that help.

Bulldogs goalie Ron Evina deflects a shot by Scott Bozyk of the Falcons in the Metro Summer Hockey League championship game Tuesday night. The Bulldogs led 3-0, then rallied from a 4-3 deficit to claim the title with a 13-6 victory at the Plymouth Cultural Center.

Johnson duo leads Bulldogs to MSHL title

By Dan O'Meara
staff writer

Johnson & Johnson wasn't in the business of producing bandages and pain remedies Tuesday night.

Those kind of products were needed to heal the damage done by this version of Johnson & Johnson.

Craig Johnson and Mark Johnson scored three goals apiece to pace the Bulldogs to a 13-6 defeat of the Falcons and the Metro Summer Hockey League championship.

"I told (Craig), going out for the third period, we each had to get one more," said Mark Johnson of Livonia, who played for Junior A national champion Rochester, Minn., last season. "He got his and then I had to get one more, too.

"We've got two really good lines, and both can score. We have a really balanced offense."

WHILE MARK Johnson skated on the line with Joe Burton and Alan Carnes, West Bloomfield's Craig Johnson was part of a trio that included Western Michigan University teammates J.P. LaRoche and Joe Bonnett.

Burton, LaRoche and Bonnett scored two goals each, and Carnes accounted for the remaining goal. Bonnett, LaRoche and Carnes also had four assists apiece and teammate Frank Mariani three.

"It helps, obviously, when you've played with someone long enough," LaRoche said. "(He and Bonnett) skated together for 4-5 weeks (at Western), but we tended to change lines a lot. I even skated with Craig Johnson for three years (on a Little Caesars team).

Mustangs finish high in world tournament

The Mid-America Mustangs rallied from an early setback to win five of seven games and finish 16th in the 76-team world softball tournament in Oklahoma.

The Mustangs split their first two games in the girls under-15 tournament but won the next four before being eliminated late Saturday. The Pembroke Lake (Fla.) Predators won the championship.

Lori Thomczek provided one of the tournament highlights for Mid-America when she pitched a perfect game against the American Legion team from Wellston, Ohio.

Thomczek, in her third season with the Mustangs, pitched all seven innings of the 9-0 shutout, which came in the middle of Mid-America's winning streak Saturday.

"What a great way to end an outstanding career with the Mustangs, pitching a no-hitter in the world tournament," Mid-America assistant coach Ron Movinski said.

THE MUSTANGS opened with a 6-3 victory over the Dell City (Okla.) Panthers last Thursday.

Michelle Bohnke collected four hits and drove in one run, and Danielle Mortiere had two key hits that knocked in one run each.

Britta Anderson and winning pitcher Thomczek had two hits apiece, and Anderson and Cindy Lehnis accounted for one RBI each.

The Mustangs fell into the losers bracket Friday after dropping a 3-2 game to the Jacksonville (Fla.) Raiders. Karen Jose and Lehnis drove in the Mid-America runs.

The Michigan team rallied later Friday by whipping a North Carolina team 28-3 in four innings. Stacy Movinski was the winning pitcher, and Lehnis and Jose were the offensive leaders with three hits apiece.

Thomczek, Jenny Horosko and Bohnke chipped in two hits each, and Mortiere added a two-run triple.

THE MUSTANGS won their first three games on Saturday — 7-6 over McCorkle of West Virginia, 9-0 over American Legion Post 371 and 3-2 over Louisville's Hit and Misses — the sixth-rated team in the country.

Mid-America rallied from a 6-3 deficit in the sixth inning to beat McCorkle. Movinski's three-run double tied the score, and Stephanie Long's eighth-inning single was the game-winning hit.

Jose scored the winning run and had three hits, Lehnis and Sarah Rowe two hits apiece. Maureen Drabicki was the winning pitcher.

Thomczek hurled her perfect game, allowing no hits and no walks, in the next contest. She got offensive help from Lehnis, who had three hits and two RBI, Mortiere (two hits) and Kate Strahan, Long and Jenny Garvey with one RBI each.

Thomczek turned around and pitched the Mustangs to their upset win over Hit and Misses in the next game, and she also had the game-winning hit. Her sixth-inning triple sent Rowe to the plate to make the score 3-2.

Miller sees improved chances with pro team

By C.J. Risak
staff writer

When he played football at Farmington Harrison, John Miller was the show.

At Michigan State, Miller was an integral part of what blossomed into a very big show.

Now comes Miller's greatest challenge. He's searching for his place, hoping for a break, wanting to prove he belongs in the biggest show — professional football.

"I think they're pretty good," was Miller's estimation of his chances after the Detroit Lions' Friday morning practice session at the Silverdome. "I know they're better than last year."

Ah, yes. Last year. Not a happy time for Miller, someone unaccustomed to having to prove himself. At Harrison, he was rated as one of the state's best football players. At MSU, he started for three years in the defensive backfield and helped the Spartans win the Rose Bowl in 1988.

AS AN UNDRAFTED rookie last year, Miller was just hoping to stick the season out with the Lions. He couldn't. He ended up on their developmental squad.

Training camp in '89 was a nightmare for Miller. "I didn't know what I was fighting for," he said. The six other safties in camp battling him for one spot on the roster didn't know, either. "Last year, it was like I just hung around to collect a paycheck through training camp. I knew I wasn't going to make it."

There's less competition this year, improving Miller's chances. He's currently the back-up to starting safety Bennie Blades, and he plays on all the special teams.

"They like what I'm doing with the punt-block situation," he said. "I think I belong on this team."

If his work in the secondary doesn't impress the defensive staff, Miller hopes special teams coach Frank Ganz will put in some good words for him.

But . . .

He has his negatives. His size is fine (6-foot-1, 200 pounds), but his speed isn't (4.7 in the 40).

"They're always going to question my speed," he said. "I'm not even sure they trust me back there."

WHICH IS why the Lions signed cornerback LeRoy Irvin last week. Irvin may be nearing the end of his career, but he has experience and has had some outstanding seasons, twice making the trip to the Pro Bowl.

Irvin doesn't play the same position, but his signing could have ramifications on Miller's fate. Should the Lions decide to carry five cornerbacks and only three safeties, instead of four and four, Miller's chances of sticking with the squad will dip.

"It's a Catch-22," he said. "They want experience back there and I don't have it."

The catch is the Lions don't want to risk letting him gain experience at their expense.

Miller refuses to let the numbers game — five-and-three or four-and-four — get to him. "I don't have any time to worry about what they're thinking. I have to keep my mind straight."

HIS PERSEVERANCE should work to his advantage. After failing to make the team last season, Miller stuck with it and kept on training. "I worked out here (at the Silverdome) all during the off-season," he said. "I was coming in from East Lansing.

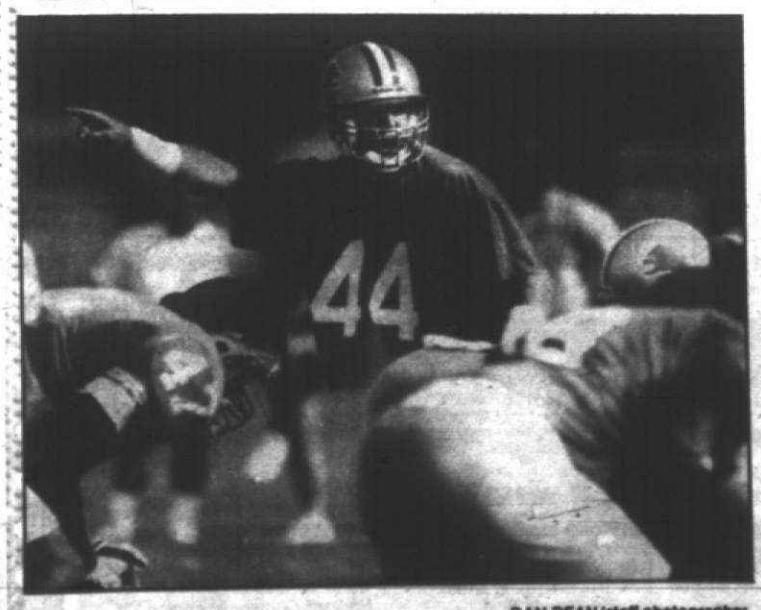

"I think they knew I was committed."

But Miller's determination has its limits. "If this doesn't work out, I'll go somewhere else," he said. If no other team expresses an interest in him, though, Miller will give up his dream. Married six weeks ago, he has no plans to play in the new international football league next year.

"I'll have to go out and find a job," he said. It was clearly a prospect he didn't savor.

And it wasn't something he expected. Miller clearly believes he has a solid shot at making the Lions. "Whenever I start to look down at the situation, I think about last year," he said.

It was much worse then. Now, Miller knows the question of his making the big show will be his to answer, with his performance on the field during the exhibition games.

John Miller, former area prep grid star, is pointing toward a job in the Lions defensive secondary and on special teams.

Morton Downey Jr. will bring his Big Mouth format and the Big Mouth podium to Joey's Comedy Club in Livonia for a show Sunday.

Morton Downey won't apologize for TV persona

By Loraine McClish
staff writer

Once the most talked about talk show host, Morton Downey Jr. will bring his show to Joey's Comedy Club in Livonia for a special appearance Sunday.

"The Morton Downey Jr. Show" continues to rake up high ratings on CNBC Cable. The show that's coming here with the Big Mouth format and the Big Mouth podium is the last stop on a multi-city tour of live performances across the country.

The format remains the same. Downey chooses a subject. He asks for volunteers from the audience who are knowledgeable about that subject. The audience-volunteer experts in turn choose to take a for or against stand on a question pertaining to that subject. Then the show begins.

His show was once described as "Downey facing off with guests like a starved lion eyeing fresh meat."

What he does is infuse the interview form with a disturbing anger and rage that has led him to a mass audience seeking an alternative to the lulling monotony they found in existing programming, he says.

Downey makes no apologies for the television persona he has created. He is quick to defend his position as a kind and decent man, albeit an angry one.

TESTING THE bounds have been his legacy, one that has pushed "the interview form far enough to discover the truth.

Downey is the son of Morton Downey, probably the most noted tenor of his day, and Barbara Bennett, sister to Joan and Constance.

He has proved himself a versatile entertainer over and over again.

He has had starring roles in a succession of films — "Tales from the Crypt" for HBO; "Predator II" opposite Danny Glover; the soon-to-be-released film "Down and Dirty" opposite Robert Davi; and the NBC television movie "Thanksgiving Day" opposite Mary Tyler Moore.

Late in 1989 he walked away from Trump's Castle in Atlantic City with across-the-board rave reviews for his performance in a review of music that spanned the '50s to the '90s.

For those who've pigeonholed

Mellow singer

Bennett marks 40th show biz year

By Carolyn Barnett-Goldstein
special writer

SPEAKING FROM his Manhattan apartment in the soft-spoken, mellowed voice sometimes heard in concert and on his recordings, Tony Bennett is candid, and patient, with a readily infectious laugh.

In discussing his music and his painting (one of his watercolors, "Peace," is part of the permanent display at the United Nations Assembly building), his life's concerns, attitudes and goals and how he acquired his perspectives are revealed, as is the mind behind the works.

He is in the middle of a four-nation tour celebrating his 40th anniversary in show business and promoting his 91st album, the autobiographical "Astoria" (the New York city where he was born), that brings him to the Meadow Brook Music Festival with the Count Basie Orchestra at 8 p.m. Wednesday.

Describing his considerations in finding a song, Bennett says, "One of the games I play with singing songs, well, there are a couple of games, but one is to try and find new songs that hopefully will enter into the American songbook permanently.

"BUT, THEN if there's a terrific standard that I like — I'm in competition with myself — but what I try to do is to try to get the definitive version of a song, of one of those great standards that isn't overdone. But I really try to nail it down "And one of the fun games is to try and have an orchestration, or an individual musician get properly involved with me and come up with something that just nails that song down to the ground. So they say, 'That's the way to do that song.' In other words, to try and make it my own, just that one tune."

He credits his music director of 25 years, pianist Ralph Sharon, with hepling him. Bennett says, "He and I really have this game of just being funesmiths. I mean, where we just look for new songs by new composers, or undiscovered songs by great composers the public doesn't know about, and try and make them famous. And we've had good luck. We've had, maybe, 37 songs like 'The Good Life,' 'Who Can I Turn To?' 'The Shadow of Your Smile'

"We try to find songs that other singers start doing. It's nice to find new songs, and then you hear all the other singers doing them."

Each song must relate to his heart. He must feel he is able to make it credible. "That's the only way I do it." For example, he never tires of "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

HE SAYS, "It's become my favorite song because it's given me the most wonderful music adventure. I've been able to sing for five presidents and for five Command Performances. I'm invited all over the world to sing. It's given me a handle where I'm able to sing without compromising (because it's a quality song). I can just sing the best songs

"If a singer doesn't love a song, he can't convey that kind of love to the audience. You know, I notice that more than anyone else with Judy Garland. It was such a phenomenon to watch her when she was at Carnegie Hall. What I really saw, very clearly, more than any other performer, is that she loved the audience so much that that's how much she got back. And I said that, that's what it's all about."

He tries to sing from his heart to reach that of a listener's. "It's all about that. That's how I paint. It's like Joe Williams, the blues singer, told me, 'It's not that you want to sing. It's that you have to sing.'"

Facing his 64th birthday the next day, he says, "I really feel like I'm starting out. I'm always learning. And it feels great."

Bennett's prerequisite of quality is automatically dictated by a self-respect learned as a child from his mother's example. A seamstress, she raised three children alone after his father, an Italian grocer, died when he was 9. A peaceful, hard-working woman, she refused to work on a cheap dress. He quotes her as saying, "You give me a good dress, and I'll work on it."

HE ALSO LEARNED a lot about respect for his music as an altar boy in church.

From his music he has learned "to have the courage not to compromise. You should be strong enough as an artist, no matter what the punishment may be (he laughs) just to do what you have to do. Whatever it is. Even if it's considered a failure to everyone else. If you know in your heart what's right, then, just do it. And usually when you follow your instincts, it just becomes right."

Tony Bennett has starred on 91 record albums and his hits include "The Good Life," "Who Can I Turn To," "The Shadow of Your Smile" and, of course, "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

The courage of his convictions comes from "just rolling through life (meeting) masters like Duke Ellington, who taught me to eliminate all negatives and stay away from stress and be positive, and, then, I use that as a study. There are people along the way that have given me some very wonderful lessons, and they're not only masters. They're just good human beings."

Composer Richard Rodgers told Bennett, "The audience is the critic. They're the ones. If they like it, that's it." His first vocal teacher, Abe Katz, former principal trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera, taught him his imperceptible breath control and continues assisting him in preserving his voice.

In painting as well as in music he believes, "You're supposed to communicate. That's why my champions are the givers like Louis Armstrong, Jimmy Durante, Sammy Davis Jr. They went on stage and gave a hundred percent. These are my heroes. Ella Fitzgerald, she can't wait to get to the next job. I love people like that."

BENNETT THINKS to be given this gift from God means one should not "sin against it." Like Fitzgerald, who he says is, "the most humble person in the world," he loves to sing for people.

He says, "It's a matter of just getting that lesson of not sinning against whatever humble gift that you've been given. I learned the hard way. We all made mistakes, but I've learned, don't abuse it. Be professional. I admire that in other people, so I decided I'd get disciplined about it.

"If you're disciplined, you know your center. You know what you have to do. You show up. You make it happen as many times as you can, and good things come from hard work."

His painting helps his peace of mind. It's "very meditative." He says, "I'm almost three quarters finished with the painting (I'm doing) of the Grand Canal in Venice. And I'm looking at it right now as I'm talking — in the reflection in the mirror. I'm very happy with the way it's coming out. It's very good because, while it looks classical, there's a beautiful, modern motorboat going by a gondola (he laughs), so it makes it a modern painting."

Originally he studied to be a graphic artist before turning to music. He says, "Teachers today say, 'Come up with a new idea.' They don't say, 'Study life, study techniques. It's a hard job. Study the masters.'"

INSPIRATION FOR his paintings comes from music as well as literary works. He loves to read authors like Thomas Mann and Dostoyevsky. "I just think it's great to have a conversation, when you're reading, with a master. You're going to really learn something."

While his life's perspective is a combination of an Italian acceptance of life and that of a dreamer, he's definitely part of the American experience.

His "Astoria" album produced by his sons, Danny and Daegal, who also manage him, reflects his tour's title, "Spirit of Family." A light comes through his voice at the mention of his sons. him as the modern day Howard Beal, the crazed newsman in "Network," Downey will join the panel of inquisitors on the new NBC game show "To Tell the Truth." There the "kinder and gentler" Downey will seek out the truth affably while retaining his confrontational style on "The Morton Dwney Jr. Show."

NOW AFTER A peripatetic year of acting, lecturing and generally decrying the injustices that prompt his anger, Downey looks forward to pounding the podium with the hell-bent evangelical style that galvanized his popularity and earned him a unique niche in broadcast history.

Downey credits parental censorship during his childhood as the seed of his anger.

"I remember when I was a kid and I tried to speak out and was countered with a firm, 'Keep still,' " he said. "I was held under a bushel long enough.

" 'When I spit out my silver spoon, I decided I would speak out on the issues. I felt I should speak out — not to change people's minds — as much as to give them another thought. Maybe the seed would grow."

How to be an advertising whiz.

You have to buy a newspaper ad in the Detroit market and you're faced with a real dilemma. Circulation is down for the Detroit News and Free Press. Ad rates are up. How do you juggle the numbers, stretch your budget, and get the biggest bang for your buck?

See for yourself how SPRING measures up.

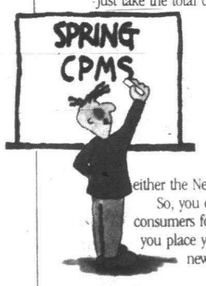

You don't need a yardstick to see that your advertising dollar can buy more in SPRING. SPRING's network of 39 suburban Detroit newspapers reaches more than 1,000,000 readers at a cost-per-inch that's below that of the News or Free Press — daily or Sunday editions.

That means you can run bigger ads or run more ads when you put SPRING in your media buy.

Get the lowest CPMs.

This is pretty easy — even for math phobics. Just take the total cost of your newspaper ad and divide that number by the circulation (the DNA's un-audited figures, or SPRING's audited numbers). You'll find SPRING delivers Detroit's upscale suburban market at a lower cost per thousand than either the News or the Free Press. So, you can reach more consumers for less money when you place your ad in SPRING's newspaper network.

The bottom line? SPRING delivers the suburbs best.

No matter how you add it up, the bottom line is this: SPRING is simply a better buy.

SPRING reaches more than one million readers. SPRING's circulation is strong and stable. And all SPRING newspapers are audited by either CAC or ABC.

Best of all, SPRING costs less per thousand — and less per inch — than the Detroit dailies.

Now that you know the score, shouldn't you put SPRING in your advertising plan?

Children's theater is important to Marquis

Performances of the musical "Jack and the Beanstalk" will be presented at 11:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 11, 18 and 25, and at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday-Friday, Aug. 14-31, at the Marquis Theatre in Northville. Tickets at $4 for children, $5 for adults are available at the door or by calling the theater at 349-8110.

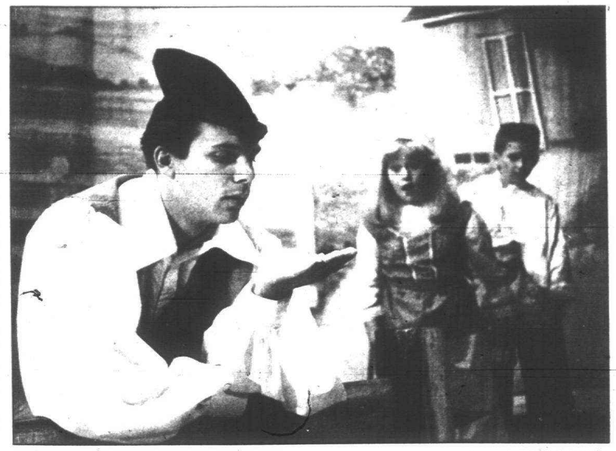

By Mary Jane Doerr
special writer

The stage of the Marquis Theatre in Northville was filled with a set complete enough for an afternoon rehearsal.

Down the aisles came about 50 thumb-clicking, toe-dancing children keeping time with a jazzy piano piece. If anyone talked, the others were quick to quiet them. These children were very serious about their two-week acting course.

Children's theater is Inge Zayti's thing, and director Arthur Rizzo says she is fabulous at it.

This summer, 200 children have been enrolled by their parents in the Marquis Theatre's Day Camp for Children, in downtown Northville. Each two-week session has two classes of 25 children each, all ranging in age from 7 to 14.

BILL BRESLER/staff photographer

Scott Peerbolte as Jack contemplates beans, while Janet Patton and Patrick Lokey as townspeople look on, in the Marquis Theatre production of "Jack and the Beanstalk."

TOGETHER THEY receive instruction in singing, dancing, acting, improvisation, mime, makeup, stage movement and just about everything that is involved with a community theatrical production. On the final Friday, the children perform a show for their parents.

"This has been a big success ever since we started it three summers ago," said Zayti, owner of the Marquis Theatre. Zayti came to the United States in 1966 from her native Badharburg in Germany. She received her experience in children's theater in Africa working for the German peace corps.

Ten years ago, she bought the historic Northville Theatre and renovated it for community productions.

"Our children's theater productions are very, very good," she said with confidence, in her German accent.

The Marquis Theatre opens its children's camps to all children. From the group of 200, some will audition and be accepted for Star Camp. At Star Camp, children can concentrate on improving their acting.

WHEN THEY have become more accomplished, they can audition for Marquis Theatre Children. MTC is a group of 25 children who put on three children's productions each year. Last December, their their production of "Cinderella" played for five weeks to some 25,000 school children.

"It is my dream to take them to China some day," said Zayti. "We had a deal going with China to take our MTCs to Beijing, until everything fell apart over there. Now, 'Alles ist kaput' (The deal is off)."

This summer, Zayti is drawing on some 10 of her MTC children to take parts in her summer musical "Jack and the Beanstalk." Arthur Rizzo, who has directed community theater for some 20 years in suburban Detroit, has agreed to direct the production.

"We read four or five scripts and we all liked the Prince Street Players script because of the humor," explained Rizzo, who teaches high school English in Detroit during the winter months. "This script is not 'grim' like so many of the fairy tales. The giant is simply misunderstood. In the end all the wrongs are made right."

The story takes place in the giant's laboratory where he does his research. The show includes music and is vaudeville in style.

"THE SCRIPT offers the children an opportunity to work with adults and experience a good script," said Rizzo. "It is geared to children, but not condescending."

Three of the children who have auditioned and been accepted for parts in the show have definite ideas about what parts they would like to play.

"I want to be either Jack or a chicken," said Patrick Lokey, 11, of Novi. Lokey has been involved with the children's theater program for the last year, performing in the "Christmas Show" and the "Musical Revue." This summer, he has been accepted into Star Camp and says he likes analyzing plays.

Stehanie Unger, 10, of Farmington is also a pro of the Marquis Theatre's productions. She appeared as Jasmine in "Aladdin" and in the "Christmas Show" and the "Musical Revue."

"I want to be the singing harp in this production," said Unger, who is enrolled in Star Camp this summer. "I like working with adults because it is more professional."

ERNIE NOLAN, 13, of Northville was last seen on the Marquis Theatre stage as Seymour in "Cinderella," but he has also appeared in "A Very Special Christmas," "The Velveteen Rabbit," "Wizard of Oz," "Peter Pan" and the "Musical Revue." He was the 1985 Showtime Talent Quest Grand Prize Winner for Michigan.

"I want to be either Jack or a tap-dancing cow in this production," said Nolan, who studies tap dancing. He likes working with adults because they have more confidence backstage.

"Sometimes I have trouble memorizing my lines but I always manage," said Nolan, who also attends Star Camp this summer.

Rizzo said, "The attitude here is a serious one of discipline, not the usual, 'Let's have a good time.' Inge knows children's theater and she is good at it."

Bergamot: fragrant flower makes tasty tea

nature

Timothy Nowicki

Hiking a trail throughout the year that traverses several habitats will always provide new scenery if you take the time to observe the differences.

As summer progresses each week brings new experiences. Spring wildflowers, like trillium and trout lily, are gone for the year. But they have been replaced by hawkweed and oxeye daisy in the meadows, which will be replaced by knapweed and Queen Anne's lace.

Some flowers leave no trace of their appearance after they have finished setting seed. While other flowers leave behind a hardened "woody" stem and remnant flower parts to mark their location for next season.

All winter long I am reminded of the beautiful lavender flowers of bergamot which will replace the dried stems by late summer. It is easy to recognize the location of bergamot because the stems stand 4-5 feet tall. They prefer to grow in dry open clearings.

ON TOP OF this towering stem is a half-sphere shaped flower head made of small tubes. Looking down into the flower head itself can be an interesting experience in shape and patterns. But if you take a flower head and crush it between your fingers and then smell it, you will be rewarded with a delightful minty fragrance.

It seems like this entire plant is a multitude of sensory experiences. If you gently grasp the stem and rotate your finger you will note that the stem is not round, but square. All mints have a square stem.

These sensations can be experienced even before the plant blooms. In late summer the spray of tubular lavender colored flowers eminating from a half sphere base are very attractive to people and insects. Butterflies are common pollinators of bergamot because their long probosis can reach the nectar at the bottom of those long tubes.

If you enjoy various tasting teas, you may want to make some from the green leaves of bergamot. It does not taste like peppermint or spearmint, it has its own unique flavor.

Walking trails and observing what is there at the moment is very enjoyable, but anticipating what is to come can add another dimension to an outdoor experience.

Computer imaging can make a concept a reality by translating an architect's vision into a near picture quality rendering. At top, a car drives down an undeveloped road, but using a computer, an architect can show what that road would look like after an office hotel/complex is constructed (bottom).

Designers love dealing with computer imaging

By Gerald Frawley
staff writer

For those who look at a blueprint and just don't get it, computer imaging may be the answer.

Over the years, architects, builders, landscapers, interior designers and others in the building trades have grappled with the challenge of explaining concepts with two-dimensional drawings.

The solution? Using high-definition computer imaging, architects can now graphically depict what a project will look like before work is even begun.

"It's like a Polaroid into the future," New Image Systems of Michigan Inc. president Rick Skiba said. New Image, in Warren, also has offices in the Design Center in Troy and plans to expand to Royal Oak.

Although still in its infancy, computer imaging already has many applications, Skiba said.

New Image sells both hardware and software to the building trades as well as other types of businesses, including cosmetic surgeons, dentists, hair salons, clothing designers, and even furniture designers.

COMPUTER IMAGING systems cost from $9,000 to $33,000, but the average system is in the $15,000 to $20,000 range, Skiba said.

"At one time, the architects and designers were very skeptical of this," Skiba said. Creative people have frowned on computer imaging because it seems cold when compared to artists renderings done by hand, he said.

"But now they've found it not only enhances creative ability, but it speeds up the process," Skiba said.

Maurice Parkins, president of the municipal planning consultant firm Maurice Parkins Associates in Bingham Farms, said he has done a great deal of research into computer imaging and is currently learning how to use a system.

"I'm really excited about it," Parkins said, adding that when a delegation of Soviet officials were in town last November, they were intrigued — as is he — with computer imaging's possible uses in planning.

'We activate one area, move it, tip, turn it, change it's color, add perspective — all without affecting the rest (of the image).'

— Brian Pontillo
design consultant

THE MOST impressive thing about computer imaging is its speed, Parkins said. "Let's say a builder who is building a subdivision has a model home, but a customer wants to see what it would look like with a wrap-around porch. That would take an artist a couple of days or maybe weeks (to draw a rendering). With computer imaging you can do it in minutes or hours," Parkins said.

Computer Imaging is not a complex thing to learn, Parkins continued. "It depends on the ability of the student, of course, but it's no more difficult than taking a college course."

Brian Pontillo, design consultant with New Image, said most people can learn computer imaging in a couple of days.

"IT'S NOT difficult," he said. For example, if an office building owner wishes to add a new wing, the operator records an image of the existing site with a video camera.

Then, the video camera is hooked up to a computer that converts the image into data that can be read by the system, Pontillo said.

Once that is done, an architect can select items from a computer data base and superimpose these images over the old site to illustrate the new construction, Pontillo said.

The computer data base includes images of decks, spas, pools, plants, windows, doors and a variety of different surfaces that can be used to construct an entire house or building, Pontillo said.

If a new wall surface is developed, users can add it to the data base by taking a picture of the surface and loading it into the computer, he added.

Pontillo said computer imaging works with blueprints or computer-aided drawing programs, changing a two-dimensional drawing into an image almost indistinguishable from a photograph, he said.

BECAUSE THEY are object-orientated, computer images can be manipulated in size, shape, color and perspective without affecting the rest of the representation, he said.

"We activate one area, move it, tip, turn it, change its color, add perspective — all without affecting the rest (of the image)," he said. The result is a very realistic image that can nearly pass as a photograph, Pontillo said.

Computer images can also be made to have an animated look which enables an architect to highlight a particular area, Pontillo said.

Cessily Thalacker, design communications director with New Image, said computer imaging allows an architect or designer to very quickly convey an idea or concept with photograph-like clarity.

Schweitzer expands via office purchases

Sterling Heights-based Schweitzer Real Estate has purchased nine area Coldwell Banker offices and now operate 24 branches as Coldwell Banker Schweitzer Real Estate.

Since the merger, which took effect in late June, the Farmington Hills Coldwell Banker office has been closed and its employees dispersed to other Schweitzer offices.

"Coldwell Banker was interested in having a large company be the one to absorb their nine offices," said Barb Kimball, a Schweitzer spokeswoman. "What a perfect way to have a very large operation in a large city like this."

Schweitzer will be the largest multi-office company within the Coldwell Banker network. Coldwell Banker, part of the Sears Financial Network, has its headquarters in Mission Viejo, Calif.

It has nearly 1,900 residential real estate sales offices in North America.

With the merger, Schweitzer went from having 16 offices and about 500 sales associates to its current 709 in 24 branches.

"It's to the advantage of the community because very often we find Detroiters don't move too far from where they grew up," Kimball said. "The advantage is to be referred to someone that your broker knows personally or knows through the system."

The Sterling Heights administrative center has undergone some changes, but "in the sales offices there have been no changes," Kimball said.

"It's been a very smooth transition. They went out one weekend and took down all the yard signs and changed them," she said.

The company's headquarters, on E. 14 Mile Road, is "bursting at the seams," Kimball said. "We're adding a lot of people and I don't know when it's going to stop."

A family-owned business, Schweitzer Real Estate was founded in 1962 by Violet Schweitzer. The current president is her son, Paul. In 1978, the company became a charter member of the Better Homes & Gardens franchise. That relationship ended when the recent acquisition took effect.

The new organization's primary marketing area is Wayne, Oakland, Macomb and Washtenaw counties.

people realize because 30 percent of the population — and that's a conservative estimate — cannot envision a finished product from a flat drawing.

"The bottom line is this is a creative tool," Thalacker said. Computer imaging is not meant to eliminate artistic renderings, but to be an extension of them, she said.

PHILIP DONDERO, manager of the Oakland County Planning Commission — which bought a computer imaging system at the start of the year — said the planning department uses computer imaging for a variety of projects.

"It allows us to visually depict something so they can see what the heck we're talking about," Dondero said.

For example, there was a proposal to double the height of telephone poles in Oakland Township along designated scenic drives, Dondero said. "So we went out there with a video camera, took some pictures, and then sat down with the township people to show them what it would really look like."

Other recent uses of computer imaging include the landscaping of Oakland County's rails-to-trails program, in which abandoned railroad right-of-ways are converted to bike paths, and the proposed placement of a veteran's memorial statue at the Oakland County Service Center.

The planning department uses the system weekly, Dondero said, adding he thinks Thalacker's estimate that 30 percent of all people have difficulty conceptualizing from two-dimensional drawings is too conservative.

New Image president Skiba said in addition to reducing time spent on renderings and helping to present ideas and concepts visually, computer imaging can help reduce a client's cost. "I worked in the architectural end and I know renderings can cost anywhere from $200 to $10,000."

This kitchen ultimate in style

(AP) — If the 16th-century classical Roman architect Andrea Palladio were asked to design a kitchen for the 23rd-century starship Enterprise, it might look something like the one in this year's Kips Bay decorator show house in New York.

The stark yet luxurious black-and-white room, priced into six figures, was designed by Eric Bernard to, according to him, make people in tuxedos look good. Features, he said, are "a ceiling that looks like a cathedral, a floor for an emperor's chamber and a range hood that looks like a pipe organ.

"Although 90 percent of my clients have a catering service or a cook, I thought it would be silly not to make the working part as easy and enjoyable as possible."

Thus he incorporated all the technological bells and whistles he could find. There are voice-activated appliances, a revolving pantry, a garbage recycling system and a computerized scale that not only weighs you but suggests a diet when you've gained a few pounds.

The kitchen, 14-by-28 feet, is divided into three domed sections. The main circular work space is in the large central area. Entering the room, you find a multi-screened computer and audiovisual system. At the other end, in an alcove, is an oversize refrigerator with glass doors and the electrified pantry shelves.

WHILE THE LOOK is stunning — black granite counters, rounded white laminate cabinetry, smoked glass doors, glass domed ceilings and black-and-white Italian tile floors — it's the technology that seems more startling.

The voice-activated system, which can be programmed to recognize up to four voices, can turn lights and television on and off, start and stop the toaster, coffee maker, blender and food processor, and start moving the pantry shelves so you can easily retrieve a can of peas or a package of spaghetti.

The computer that can be linked to a bathroom scale has been programmed to provide nutritional information and recipes. If a list of foods on hand is kept up to date, the computer could list needed supplies, print out shopping lists for specific recipes and indicate appropriate recipes for dieters. Hookups between the videocasette recorder and computer make it possible to watch a cooking demonstration and then call up the recipe.

The pantry works like an electrified dumbwaiter. The compact unit has a series of shallow shelves that move up and down with the touch of a button. Instead of reaching up or down for the desired item, you press a button and wait for the item to come to you. Manual operation is possible, too, in case of power failure. Each shelf holds up to 50 pounds.

BERNARD SAYS it would cost $200,000 to $300,000, depending on equipment, to duplicate the kitchen for a client. Of course, it didn't cost the sponsors anywhere near that because materials and labor were charitable contributions.

Contractor Ray Beech said this kitchen is different in degree more than kind from other luxury kitchens. The waste disposal system — a prototype — is designed with recycling in mind. Four chutes deliver sorted trash to separate containers in the basement. Beech said similar, less expensive, systems already are on the market.

The voice activator has been installed in 6,000 houses and costs $4,500. The pantry carousel is $8,000, not including labor and installation. Computers already are a part of many kitchens, which these days are likely to be viewed as family rooms as well, he said.

It took Bernard seven weeks to complete the show house kitchen, a minor miracle in these days of construction delays. After just four weeks on display, it is destined to be dismantled unless the new owner of the house (a Japanese businessman) decides to pay to keep it.

The Kips Bay show house raises money for the Kips Bay Boys' and Girls' Club in the Bronx and for programs at two nearby schools.

UNFORTUNATELY, THE WAY TO A MAN'S HEART REALLY IS THROUGH HIS STOMACH.

While your cooking was supposed to help you win someone's heart, it may also help you destroy it.

Because a diet that's too high in fat may increase the risk of heart disease as well as certain kinds of cancer.

Fortunately, you can help reduce your risk simply by eating a low-fat diet containing lots of fruits and vegetables, whole grain foods, lean meats, fish, poultry and low-fat dairy products.

For a free booklet on how to reduce the fat in your diet, call 1-800-EAT- LEAN.

Don't let yourself be counted among the thousands of people every year who literally eat their hearts out.

Privies draw her attention

(AP) — Tommye Walter has a passion for privies.

The Godfrey, Ill., woman owns outhouse books, jewelry and about 75 small models of outhouses. She also gives speeches on the virtues of three rooms and a path to those who can't remember what getting back to nature was really like.

"I always say I grew up in a privy culture. I lived with one till I was 28 years old," said the 64-year-old, West Blocton, Ala., native.

Her husband Bill, who owned a plumbing company, calls her a privyologist. She calls it fun.

"I like to poke fun at people who try to pretend outhouses never existed," says the public information specialist for Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville.

Several years ago as a nostalgia wave swept the country, Walter noticed that, for some reason, outhouses were being ignored. She found a generation of Americans who had never heard of an outdoor loo and she began lecturing on the topic.

Walter has spoken before church congregations, college students and engineers, highlighting her talk with photos and slides of some of the facilities she has discovered.

WALTER'S SEARCH for the facilities spans the globe.

"I have gone in outhouses from China to Ireland to the island of Bali," she says.

"Out west there are a number of two-story ones behind boarding houses built during the Gold Rush," she said. "And there is a fabulous three-story one behind a castle in Switzerland."

There were the portable outhouses with wheels, outhouses with window boxes and the occasional brick model with a fireplace. Some discriminating homeowners built two-sided structures, one for women, the other for men.

Some homeowners tried to blend the privy into the architectural style of the home.

"If they had gingerbread trim on their house, they built the outhouse to match. If they carpeted their floors, they carpeted the privy floors and seats, too.

The half-moon carved in many an outhouse door was utilitarian as well as decorative — it provided ventilation.

The sign of privy refinement was the type of catalog the owner offered as an early forerunner to toilet paper.

Sears, Roebuck and Co. was the Cadillac of catalogs, Walter said.

"If you went into an outhouse and found both Sears and Montgomery Ward catalogs of the past season, you knew you were in a house of high means," she said.

Although the first indoor toilet was built by Sir John Harington in England in the 1500s, indoor plumbing didn't catch on until 300 years later when Thomas Crapper improved Harington's invention.

Outhouses came in from the cold in the United States around the turn of the century in the homes of wealthy urbanites. It took 40 more years before they became common in country homes.

Don't spend time with a Critical Care Nurse.
Don't Drink and Drive

A public service announcement from the Southeastern Michigan Association of Critical Care Nurses

"The bad part of town."

Abandoned cars. Sidewalks scattered with crack vials. Bombed-out buildings.

A neighborhood whose spirit is as broken as the bits of glass that dot the street. There are only two things to do if your neighborhood becomes a war zone: give up or take action.

The Philadelphia Story

One day, in the "bad part" of Philadelphia, a neighbor complained to a neighbor. And then to another. And then to more. People didn't like their homes being "taken over." Feelings of helplessness and resentment turned to action.

They went to the police for help.

Soon a substation was established where folks could readily report crime. Weekly meetings began. Community watches started. Things started getting fixed up. Vacant lots were cleaned up and fenced. Abandoned cars were towed away. Painting and repairing programs began.

The neighborhood was cleaning itself up. The local 4-H Club even helped set up garden clubs where kids, teens and adults could work together on plants and flowers while talking over ways to raise awareness.

When people care and get involved, neighborhoods change. When a block doesn't look like a haven for crime and drugs, it won't be. And in this part of Philly, where once only apathy grew, seven gardens now bloom.

This is only one success story of many. To find out what can be done in your neighborhood, write: The McGruff Files, 1 Prevention Way, Washington, D.C., 20539-0001. And help...
